TIGERS TOP WALTON

Last Friday night the Bearcats, Cubs and Bearettes visited New Haven, where they were entertained by Coach Allen's cagers. The Walton basketballers were able to win but one game, and this victory was turned in by the Cubs, who, incidentally, have lost but one game this season. Details of the first two games were not available, so all we can say is that the Bearettes lost and the second team won.

The final game of the evening brought together the Tigers and Bearcats, and the former were awarded the decision by the narrow margin of 20 to 18. The Cats held a 13 to 9 advantage at the half, but the Tigers erased this difference in the final frame for a win. Gatewood led the winners in the score column with 9 points, and Hamilton registered 6 for the losers.

BEARCATS TRIM FLORENCE

The Bearcats were hosts Saturday night to the Florence Knights, at the local hardwood, and before a goodly number, proceeded to give their guests a tanning. The Cats were first to draw blood, and at the half were leading 11 to 9. They held their slight advantage grimly, in the second half, and in the final minutes of the last quarter, pulled away from the Knights, to hold an 8 point advantage as the game ended, the count being 30 to 22. The Bearcats presented a revamped line-up and the boys showed their appreciation by bagging a winner much to the joy of the local fans. Three of the five lads who saw action, Arnold, Osborne and Chapman, started the season as members of the second team, and have showed steady improvement. Here's hoping they continue to better their play as the season ages. All the Cats took part in the scoring, with Lusky leading with 10 points, and Osborne and Arnold following with 7 and 6 points respectively. Grayson led the Knights in the scoring with 8 markers.

In a preliminary game, the Florence grade team, defeated the Walton grade team, 18 to 13, in an interesting contest.

FARMERS BEST BEARCATS

The Hamilton Farmers and Farmettes came to Walton Tuesday night for games with the Bearcats and Bearettes.

The girls were first on the program and the Walton entry came through in good style to win 21 to 11. The locals held the upper hand throughout the game and at the half were leading 14 to 5. Simpson was high scorer for the winners with 8 points.

The Cats and Farmers teed off next and it was a bang-up game of ball. The visitors held a slight edge during most of the game, but the ultimate outcome was uncertain until the last minute or two of play. The final score was 26 to 20 in favor of the Farmers, and at the half they were in front 11 to 8. Williamson led the winners in scoring with 9 points, and for Walton, Lusky registered a like number.

This week the Bearcats engaged in two battles, they are:

At Newport, Friday Night
Piner, Here, Tuesday, Jan. 21st

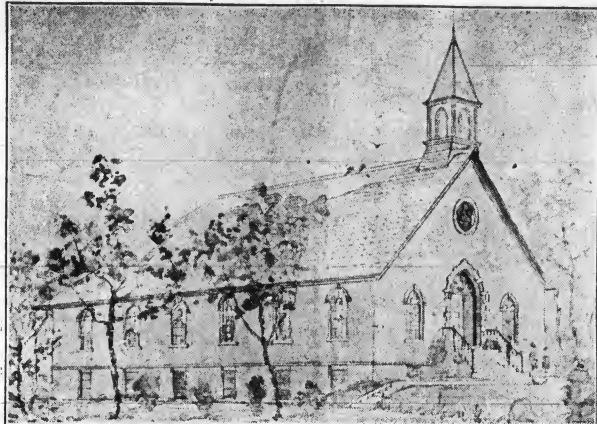

PEPS DEFEAT GIANTS

Saturday night the Walton Peps defeated the Piner Giants 34 to 22. The visitors hopped on the locals at the start of the game and were leading 15 to 12 at the intermission. The Peps showed renewed strength after the rest and soon held the lead, and the game ended with the locals on top. The Giants (and they really are) presented a formidable quintette, as three of the team were members of last year's famous mer basketballers. Clusker was the big gun of the Walton offense, scoring 19 points, with Vest and Williams trailing, and Sebree, Benson and Peebles were best for the losers.

METHODIST LADIES AID

The Ladies Aid Society of the Walton Methodist church will have an all day meeting at the church Saturday, January 18. All members are urged to be present.

Architect's Picture of New Florence Methodist Church

The above is an architectural drawing of the proposed new Methodist church at Florence, Ky. It is of Gothic design and is to be constructed of brick at an estimated cost of $8,000. The drawings are by H. M. King, chief architect of the Board of Church Extension of the M. E. Church, South, Louisville, Ky. While the proposed new structure is simple in design, it is considered to carry over the traditional features of the past, yet is quite modern in equipment, furnishing adequate facilities for the church school, young people's work, and the social life of the church. Exclusive of the sanctuary, which is somewhat adjustable to meet the size of varying congregations, there are a number of Church school rooms, a balcony, a parlor, banquet hall, kitchen, furnace room, fuel bin, and toilets. The building is thirty-five by seventy feet in exterior dimensions, and is to be located on the Dixie Highway, near the center of town.

The congregation was forced to abandon the century old frame house of worship on Bank Lick street, and is now worshipping in the Odd Fellows hall.

Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, Huntington, W. Va., will speak in the Florence High school auditorium at 11:00 a. m., (fast time) Sunday, Jan. 19th. A large audience is expected not only from the town of Florence and community, but from neighboring churches round about.

The Presiding Elder, Dr. O. B. Crockett, Ft. Thomas, Ky., will be present and will have part in the service. Other ministers are also expected. Rev. R. R. Rose, who is experienced in church building enterprises, is the pastor and will preside at the services, Sunday. The members of the building committee are: Rev. Rose, chairman, Carl Klem, secretary, J. G. Renaker, treasurer, John Fossett, Owen Bethel, C. A. McKibben and Russell Mitchell. The choir from the Walton Methodist church will assist in the music and is to render a special number.

Neal Bowman, Ohio gangster, murderer and all round bad man, paid the penalty for his crimes with his life early Friday morning at Eddyville Penitentiary. He was 33 years old and had led a life of crime for the past ten years.

Refusing spiritual solace, the escaped inmate of the Ohio State Hospital for the Criminally Insane, Lima, died at 12:07 a. m. Earlier he had reiterated professions of innocence of the crime for which he was doomed in 1934—the fatal shooting of Conner Franklin, 17-year-old companion, whose bullet-riddled body was found in Herrington Lake.

Bowman, wounded and captured in April, 1934, near Somerset, Ky., after a gun-battle with officers, accused Stanley Mercer, an accomplice, of Franklin's death. Mercer, in turn, blamed Bowman. Together they were charged with the murder of George Kaufman, a stockbroker, of Camp Nelson, during a holdup. Mercer is serving a life sentence for that crime.

Bowman, whose crime career started in Columbus, Ohio, in Mar. 1925, escaped from the Lima hospital in December, 1933. He was under commitment there for trial on a bank robbery charge.

On Saturday, Jan. 11th, at 7:00 p. m., Miss Bridgie Lafferty and Donald Dickerson were married at the parsonage of the Long Ridge Baptist church by the Rev. L. E. Aldridge in an impressive ceremony.

They were attended by Miss Mildred Scott and Henry C. Kennedy. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Lafferty, one of Sparta's loveliest and talented young women, a graduate of Sparta High school. For the occasion she was gown'd in a beautiful blue crepe dress with accessories to match. The groom is the eldest son of Mrs. Maude Dickerson, and it can truly be said, he is one of the finest young men of the county. After a short wedding trip, they will be at home, to their many friends, in Sparta.

There will be a business meeting of the Walton P. T. A. of the school building, Friday afternoon at 2:30. All members are urged to be present.

Last Wednesday just before noon Donald Lee Edmondson, age six years, was killed almost instantly at the boy's home on the Knoxville road near Dry Ridge. The little fellow had crossed the road to get the mail from the Mail carrier, and on his way back to his home, he stepped from behind the mail car and was struck by a light green sedan. CHARLES CHAPLIN IN TALKING PICTURES

Comedy Genius Has Decided On Dialogue For Next Feature

At last Charles Chaplin will talk. He will depart temporarily from the silent pictures and appear in a drama called "Modern Times." He sings a song in a farce, peculiarly in his own and has been applauded in this picture's preview. Paulette Goddard will star with him.

It is only after years of the silent pictures that Chaplin has finally come to the conclusion that he has to give to the public what they want and not what he likes or dislikes, notwithstanding his wealth.

R. D. Hogan of Dry Ridge, was a business visitor here last Wednesday.

He suffered a fracture of his skull and numerous cuts and bruises. He was found by John Binder, a farmer, and taken to St. Elizabeth Hospital, Covington, by county police. The tipped boy resides in Independence. While his condition is serious it is expected he will recover.

J. W. Schirmer Died Friday

Warsaw Merchant Passes Away After Long Illness

Early Friday morning the death angel again visited our town and bore away the spirit of Julius W. Schirmer, who had been suffering for many months with that dread disease softening of the brain. Mr. Schirmer had lived for many years in Warsaw, where he engaged in the grocery business. He was a good, honest, industrious man, a kind father and husband. When a young man he was married to Miss Jessie Weiden, who passed on to her heavenly home many years ago, leaving him with two small children, Ella Mae, now Mrs. Edson Allen, and Sammy Schirmer. Mr. Schirmer has devoted his entire time since the death of his wife to caring, providing for, and training his children to be good and useful citizens. His funeral was in the Catholic church, Monday morning, and was later laid to rest beside his wife in the Ghent cemetery. He leaves besides his daughter and son, four grandchildren, one sister and several brothers and many friends, who will greatly miss him. Funeral Directors C. L. Carlson & Son had charge of the arrangements.

Dr. and Mrs. Bruce Metcalfe of Greenville, Ohio, were here Sunday visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. George W. Ransler.

No. 4—OUR BRAKES

We've all noticed that whenever a train makes a long enough stop in a station, there's somebody on the job, dodging in and out under the cars making sure that everything is in good shape for the train to continue its trip. One of the things checked at every inspection point is the brakes. For nobody knows better than railroad men how important it is to be able to stop when you have to stop.

Now, if we think of it in a certain light, we people who own automobiles are all running little transportation systems of our own... just like the railroad and airlines and buses and trucks. The home is the main terminal and there are lots of stops along the line... flag stops, you might say, and regular scheduled stops—like the office, the grocery store, the school, the theatre, and our friends' houses.

Just like the railroad, one of the main things we need to look out for is our brakes. Of course, everybody knows this and yet somehow or other we're a little careless about it. Not that brakes don't give us plenty of notice when they're going to need adjustment. As time goes on we find that we can push the pedal lower and lower, till after a while we can shove it down almost to the floorboards before the brakes take hold. Even then we sometimes wait quite a while before we have them adjusted. It just seems to be human nature to put off things like that. They tell us the result is that one-third of all cars on streets and highways at any given time have something wrong with their brakes.

The trouble is that when we let our brakes go like that, all of a sudden we may have to make an emergency stop, and we may find it rather embarrassing. Engineers say that if we realized what goes on in brakes we would see why we ought to keep them checked up. As they explain, it's a story of momentum and friction, the same old forces we've talked about before.

They say that when we get going we build up a certain energy in the form of momentum. Now when we want to stop, we can't just destroy that energy, because, scientists tell us, Nature never lets any of its energy be destroyed. We can only convert it into some other form of energy.

What brakes really do is to convert speed-energy into heat-energy. When we push down on the brake pedal we press the brake lining against the brake drums and this creates friction that changes the energy to heat. When we have changed all the speed energy to heat, then we come to a stop.

Now modern brakes are very powerful. In fact, a 100-horsepower car will have about 500-horsepower brakes. They can stop us pretty quickly even from high speeds. But when they do, they simply change those speeds into a great deal of heat, in a very short time. The fact is we sometimes build up temperatures in our brakes as high as 1400 degrees!

It's easy to see that heat like that can cause a lot of trouble. Some of us may think it's fun to rush up to sudden stops, but we might as well realize that we have to pay for that kind of fun in excessive brake wear. It simply doesn't pay to build up brake heat a lot faster than it can be thrown off. And we certainly don't want anything back to time saved. For instance, if we're going 30 miles an hour, our brakes can stop us in 40 feet if they are all right; but it takes them less than two seconds longer to stop us in the same distance. How much better it is, under any normal circumstances, to begin to apply the brakes a few seconds earlier and with easier and later as a brake-adjustment sure, bring our car to an easy stop. As a matter of fact, smooth, gradual stopping wherever the circumstances permit, is generally taken as a sign of a good driver.

Now if we want to keep our brakes safe and sound, it's important to remember that all stops generate some heat in our brakes. That's what gradually wears down the linings, and sooner or later a brake-adjustment is necessary. And that's why we must watch them and see that adjustments are made when they are needed.

So maybe it would be a good idea to keep on thinking of our cars as private transportation systems. If we keep them in good running condition, they will serve us with safety and satisfaction.

Tax Problems Discussed

At Utopia Meeting
Boone County's tax problems and their relationship to adjoining counties were discussed capably by Wilton Stephens, Boone County Tax Commissioner, at the regular Utopia Club meeting held at Burlington.

Mr. Stephens pointed out the value of property for taxes in the various counties and their relative advantages and disadvantages to Boone County.

Group discussions of farm problems were led by John E. Origer, former president of the Utopia Club. Thirty members were present at the meeting.

Annual Poultry School
Friday, Jan. 17th

The Annual Boone County poultry school will be held at Burlington, Friday, Jan. 17th.

The school this year will be of special interest to all poultrymen. Special discussion on factors affecting the hatchability of eggs, growth and maturity of young birds, disease control and factors affecting higher egg production will be discussed.

Speakers on the program include Prof. Jim Humphrey, poultry field agent from the College of Agriculture, William Irsko, research worker in poultry husbandry and Dr. T. P. Polk, field veterinarian from the College of Agriculture and leading poultrymen.

The school is for the benefit of all poultrymen of the county and all who are interested are invited to attend. The meeting will begin at 9:30 a. m. and close at 3:30 p. m.

Herd Leads Association
The Jersey herd of O. R. Russ of near Burlington, led in the Shelby, Boone and Carroll County Dairy Herd Improvement Association the past month.

The nine cow herd of Mr. Russ produced an average of 590 pounds of milk per cow and averaged 301 pounds of butter fat and placed second in the entire association of 24 herds.

The fifty-seven cow herd of P. B. Gaines, produced an average of 727 pounds of milk per cow and 284 pounds of butter fat, led both the Tri-County Association and the State for the month. Five Boone County dairymen, O. R. Russ, Joel Gray, W. G. Kite and Purdy, Ben Nitching and Robert Youell are members of the Shelby, Boone and Carroll County Dairy Improvement Association. All these breeders have high producing purebred herds.

Poultry Flocks Make Good Record
Two large demonstration poultry flocks make good egg production records for the past month. The 578 hen flocks of Walter Robinson and Sons of near Rabbit Hash, produced 8,385 eggs during the month or an average of 145 eggs per hen.

The 996 hen flock of Grant Maddox of near Florence, produced 11,608 eggs or an average of 115 eggs per hen.

Boone County has a decided advantage in poultry production where certain important factors are observed. The great disadvantage in the past has been too many flocks went in the poultry business without out early hatched chicks, improper feed and housing and failed to observe certain fundamentals in clean ground and disease control. These important factors will be discussed at the Annual Poultry school held at Burlington, Friday, Jan. 17th.

Origin of "Jerk-Water"

The origin of "jerk-water" as applied to small towns is obscure. It is supposed that the original "jerk-water" was a place where trains stopped to take on water.

In the early days of railroads the engine was often stopped at wayside streams to replenish the water supply. This was called jerking water, because the water was carried to the locomotive in leather buckets.

In time "jerk-water" came to be applied to small towns noted for nothing in particular except that trains stopped there to take on water.

Town Populated by Jews

Tel Aviv, Palestine, was founded in 1909 as a suburb of Jaffa, with a population of less than 500.

The population has grown to more than 40,000. It is the first town in the world since the Dispersion to be built and populated wholly by Jews.

It has excellent schools, many public institutions, hospitals and a constantly increasing list of prosperous industries. It supports daily newspapers and banks.

Secretary-Bird Has Long Legs

The secretary-bird (Serpentarius secretarius) is an African bird with long legs, standing nearly four feet high. From the back of the head and nape hangs an erectile tuft of long black feathers. Around the eyes is orange skin; the head, neck, and back are bluish gray, the lower surface black; the tail quills are banded with black and tipped with white. The beak is hooked.

The secretary-bird feeds on insects and reptiles and can kill the most venomous snakes, striking them repeatedly with its taloned feet.

The long leg together with the bird's habit of leaping back after each stroke, keeps it from being bitten.

"To See Dragon's Teeth"

The reference "to see dragon's teeth" is to the classical story of Cadmus, who slew the dragon that guarded the well of Ares and sowed some of its teeth. From them sprang up the men called Spartans, who all killed each other except five, who became the ancestors of the Thebans. The teeth which Cadmus did not sow came into the possession of the King of Colchis. One of the tasks which he set Jason was to sow them and slay the armed warriors who sprang from them.

The action was over the possession of some land near the Carroll county line, known as "The Vineyard," and over which Larkin Sanders and Thompson had a shooting affray some time ago. The case was compromised Tuesday by Thompson giving up possession of land and agreeing to give possession of the house March 1st. Each party is to pay its own costs and the proceeds of the sale of the fruit is to be divided between the two parties.

Sam Yates, colored, after filling his hide full of fighting whisky last Friday, tried to batter down the lively stable door with his fists and head, and then transferred his operations to the door of "Bus" Robinson's soup house. Judge Tiller assessed him $27.50, and lieu of cash was assigned to work on the streets, but as the frigid weather prevented this work, the fine was suspended, rather than allow Yates to board it out.

Manna of the Bible
It is said that the manna of the Bible was produced by scute-travelers which exude from their bodies a clear juice that falls to the ground in drops. These drops harden into sugary grains which the Arabs of the Sinai peninsula still gather for use as food and medicine. Another kind of manna consists of lichens of the genus Lecanora, forming small round bodies that are easily blown over the ground and accumulate in such quantities as to suggest the idea that they have fallen from the sky.South America's High Peaks
South America has 28 peaks over 10,000 feet high, 42 over 20,000, and 13 over 22,000. Sixty-eight of these are extinct, and five are active volcanoes. Eleven have not been reached by any living thing except perhaps the giant condor, whose power of flight surpasses that of any other bird. Cotopaxi, the highest of the active volcanoes, has never been climbed.

PRISE FOR CHANDLER

Verly, Ind., Jan. 11, 1936
To the Editor of the Advertiser:
There is just one item that I would like to mention through the columns of the Advertiser. I am not casting the least reflection on any of the preceding governors of the grand old state of Kentucky. In my opinion they omitted a very important measure which, if put in use would add greatly to building up the code of morality throughout the world. And thanks to the voters of the grand old mother state of mine, they have elected a man who has this neglected measure in his mind. And it is none other than Governor Chandler. In his inaugural address he emphasized in plain words to the members of his General Assembly that he wanted the doors of the executive mansion closed, and closed tight, against all lobbyists and lobby. If he accomplishes this feat and nothing more, it will more than pay for his selection as governor of the state.

Looks Spanish

The reason St. Georges, Bermuda, looks so much like a Spanish town is because when the site was cleared of cedars, men built their white stone homes irregularly over the open spaces, heedless of the inevitable agent of vehicles, and so the town is a maze of narrow streets and crooked alleys bordered by walled gardens. Some of these streets still bear the original names, such as Old Malis' lane, Shishbone alley, Featherbed alley and Break neck alley.

Expert Warns of Worm Damage

Severest Outbreak Is Foreseen by Leading Entomologist in Illinois.

By W. F. Flint, Chief Entomologist, Illinois State Natural History Survey—WNU Service.

One of the most severe outbreaks of army worms that Illinois has seen in recent years can be expected, and farmers should be on guard to protect their crops.

Although the outbreak will be spotted and will not occur in all sections of the state, severe damage will be done in many areas. It will be well to keep careful watch on all heavy stands of grain or heavy brush and pastures and get the worms before they cause serious damage.

While army worms may destroy entire areas of bluegrass pasture or fields of small grain or young corn in a short time they can be completely and cheaply controlled by the use of poisoned bran baits. The bait that has been most generally used has a base of one pound of paris green mixed dry with 25 pounds of bran. When this is thoroughly mixed, there is added three gallons of water in which two quarts of cheap molasses, preferably black strap, has been thoroughly dissolved.

A new bait, with which J. H. Bigler, chief entomologist of the Illinois state natural history survey, has been working during the past year for outworm control, uses oil instead of water and molasses. This bait is made by thoroughly mixing 27 pounds of bran and one pound of paris green or white arsenic. Then two quarts of a light grade oil of an S. A. E. 20 viscosity is added. No water or molasses is used. The bait should be thoroughly mixed so that the oil gets on every particle of the bran.

Early Fighting of Moth Important to Fruit Men

The codling moth can almost certainly be counted on as the number one apple insect pest this year, asserts a bulletin from the United States Department of Agriculture. Growers spend enormous sums to combat it, but this pest has become increasingly destructive, according to Lee A. Strong, chief of the bureau of entomology and plant quarantine. Strong attributes this increase to the greater age of apple trees, to the abandonment of some orchards and to weather favorable to moth development.

A great many codling moths have been wintering in cocoons in crevices beneath the loose bark of trees, in coarse trash on the ground, in containers used to handle wormy fruit and in packing sheds. Cleaning up all these places while the moths are inactive is the ounce of prevention that is worth many times over the pound of cure in the form of insecticides. Measures other than spraying, therefore, are very important. One of the best, Strong says, is a thorough house-cleaning of orchards and packing houses early in the season.

Placing Fertilizer

Proper amounts of fertilizing per acre for corn depends both upon the type of soil and upon the method of application. Most of the old-type fertilizer attachments did not give good separation between the fertilizer and the seed, and when one of these is used not more than 100 or 150 pounds of commercial fertilizer should be used per acre, Robert M. Salter, Ohio State university agronomist, warns. With the newer arrangement, which places the fertilizer at the side of the seed in the hill, more fertilizing can be used, ranging from 125 pounds for the dark-colored soils to 200 pounds for the poorer light-colored soils. For row application to drilled corn, these amounts may be increased 25 to 50 pounds.

Large Udders

Cows of high production almost invariably have large udders and, as a rule, the udders of such cows remain large throughout most of the lactation period. The size decreases somewhat, following each milking. Extending forward from the udder on the under side of the body are the milk veins which carry blood from the udder toward the heart and in high-producing cows usually are larger. They ordinarily increase in size from first calving up to maturity. A well-developed, large udder and large milk veins are good indications of dairy capacity, although they are not infallible guides.

DOAN'S PILLS

Dr. John McLoughlin, the "White-Headed Eagle"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

RECENTLY newspapers in many parts of the United States printed this story:

"OREGON CITY, ORE.—Naturalization papers of Dr. John McLoughlin, 'Father of Oregon,' have been discovered in the vaults of the county recorder's office here.

Dr. McLoughlin, factor of the British Hudson Bay Fur company, befriended American settlers in Oregon in the early days. When the fur post was discontinued, after Oregon was ceded to the United States, Doctor McLoughlin remained and took a farm. The naturalization papers were issued by the Second District court of Oregon Territory, September 5, 1851."

Back of that brief news item lies one of the most romantic and significant—and at the same time one of the most tragic—stories in American history. For this Dr. John McLoughlin was more than just a "factor of the British Hudson Bay Fur company"—yes, even more than the "Father of Oregon." There was a time when he was known far and wide as "Emperor of the West," a wilderness king whose word was absolute law over 400,000 square miles, an empire that extended all along the Pacific coast from California to Alaska and as far east as the Great Salt Lake in Utah. There was a time when he held an influence over the Indians such as no white man had since the days of Sir William Johnson's dominance over the Iroquois on the other side of the continent.

There was a time when he, by speaking a few words could have embroiled the United States and Great Britain in a third war and if that had happened it is doubtful if the Pacific Northwest would now be under the American flag. But he refrained from speaking those words and by refraining saved the lives of hundreds of American settlers and probably thousands of American and British soldiers and sailors.

Thus the romance and the historical significance in the life story of Dr. John McLoughlin. As for the tragedy, it was the tragedy of a "king" who lost his kingdom and of a real man without a country—a more than a mere title the fictitious hero of Edward Everett Hale's famous book.

Such is the story, in part, back of the discovery, after more than three-quarters of a century, of the document which made John McLoughlin an American citizen. But even though he was no longer a "man without a country," that document could not save him from going to his grave six years later, a broken-hearted old man, the victim of the selfishness and the basest ingratitude on the part of those who had best reason to be grateful to him—the American settlers he had befriended."

The complete story is told in a new biography which, by an interesting coincidence, appeared a short time after the discovery of the McLoughlin naturalization papers in the Emperor of the West. This biography is "The White-Headed Eagle: Richard G. Montgomery of Portland, Ore., and published by the Macmillan company of New York. Much has been written about McLoughlin (the list of authorities occupies five full pages at the end of this biography) but Mr. Montgomery's is the most authoritative and most interesting word portraits of McLoughlin has yet appeared.

McLoughlin was born at Riviere du Loup some 120 miles north of Quebec on the St. Lawrence in 1754. His father was an Irishman, his mother, a Frenchman in whom French blood was mixed with the Scotch. As a boy he was serious-minded and very religious, with none of the dashing recklessness that characterized the men engaged in the business in which he was to become famous—the fur trade. Due to the influence of one of his uncles, Dr. Simon Fraser, it appeared certain that young John would become a doctor and at the age of sixteen he began studying medicine.

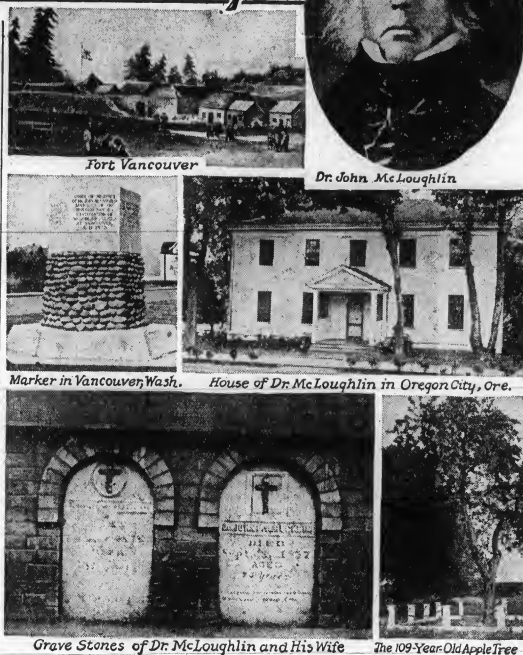

Although he practiced for a while in Montreal, it soon became apparent that "a professional career in a well-settled community held as fascination for him. The lad's gray eyes were focused on the West—there was no banking for city life in his nature." That was largely due to another uncle—Alexander Fraser, who had become prominent in the affairs of the North West company, which had been founded in 1784. The young John was born, to compete with the Hudson's Bay company for the rich prize of the fur trade throughout Canada. Through Uncle Alexander's influence the young doctor received an appointment as resident physician in the North West company and in the winter of 1800-04 proceeded to Fort William, the company's chief depot and factory on Lake Superior.

This marked the beginning of that amazing career which resulted in McLoughlin's becoming the "Emperor of the West." From being a medical officer he soon progressed to the position of chief trader. In 1820, when the bitter rivalry between the Hudson's Bay company and the North West company was at its height, young McLoughlin went to London as a North West representative to drive the bargain which consolidated the two companies. He then became a Hudson's Bay man and continued as such through the remainder of his active life.

For a time he served as chief factor at Fort Francis on the Lake of the Woods. Then, George Simpson, head of the H. B. C., recognized the great ability of the young doctor, made him assistant to Chief Factor Alexander Kennedy on the Columbia river, with the idea of his eventually succeeding Kennedy there. This was all a part of the bold scheme which Simpson had in mind.

The American, John Jacob Astor, had failed in his attempt to found a fur empire in the Pacific Northwest and his post, Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia had fallen into the hands of the North West company first and then the Hudson's Bay company. The Oregon country was held jointly by Great Britain and the United States, but Simpson planned to win this rich region with its wealth of furs for England and more particularly to "bring all the territory west of the Rocky mountains within a single Hudson's Bay company jurisdiction."

McLoughlin was selected as the instrument to bring this about and there could have been no better one selected. From the moment he took charge in 1824, abandoned Astoria and moved up the river to establish Fort Vancouver it became the center of the man who would rule both the Indians and the turbulent trappers and fur traders. Rule he did, sternly but justly, and the Indians, who called McLoughlin the "White-Headed Eagle" because of his shock of snow-white hair, respected and loved him quite as much as they feared him.

For a period of ten years Fort Vancouver was the center of a feudal empire the like of which the New World never before, and seldom since, has seen. It was a "sanctuary of civilization in the heart of the savage western country" and it came many a traveler and explorer whose name is written large in the history of the West.

John McLoughlin, Nathaniel J. Wyeth, Hall J. Kelly, Jaso Lee, Marcus Whitman, Captain Bonneville and a host of others. One of the notables who came to Vancouver was Capt. Amielus Simpson of the British navy and a symbol of his visit is to be seen near the site of Fort Vancouver to this day. "During his sojourn at Vancouver, Simpson unwittingly contributed in no small degree to the agricultural progress of the community," writes Montgomery. "While dining one evening with the doctor he was reminded by one of his men of a promise he had made a certain young lady back in London. It appears that during the desert course of a farewell banquet given in his honor, this young lady had extracted the seeds from an apple and had laughingly presented them to Simpson with the request that he plant them when he reached his destination in the Northwest wilderness. The incident had been forgotten until that moment, but when the captain's attention was called to it by his aide, he reached into his coat pocket and there he found the little packet of seeds. A ripple of laughter ran around the table as he handed them over to his host."

"Doctor John was not the man to undertake such a gift. The very next day he entrusted the apple seeds to Robert Bruce, the venerable Scotch gardener of the fort, who planted them with great care under glass. Thus, in the spirit of jest, the redoubtable white-headed Amielus made possible the first Oregon apple." That was 109 years ago. One of the trees which sprang from those seeds still stands where the venerable Robert Bruce planted them and it still bears fruit, as the writer of this article, who took the photograph of it shown above, can testify.

Unhappily for McLoughlin other seeds were also being planted in the fertile soil of the Oregon country and they bore a crop of trouble for him. For just when he was well established as the "Emperor of the West," the energetic Yankees who were to dispute with Great Britain ownership of the Northwest began to appear—first as competitive fur traders and later as missionaries and settlers.

White-actor, being of a pious disposition, (he was baptized a Catholic, his mother's faith), grew up an Episcopalian, the faith of his father, was naturally well-disposed toward the missionaries and he gave both medical and other aid to them when so often happened in their early days, they were in distress. For that matter, he did the same for the settlers even though he, as factor for the Hudson's Bay company and therefore obligated to consider its interests first, would have been justified by the rules of "big business" which were even then in vogue, in letting them starve.

Instead of doing that he gave generously from his own resources and that very generosity resulted in his downfall. Governor Simpson had never approved of his open-handed hospitality to the American settlers and that, combined with unnumberable other disagreements between the head of the Hudson's Bay company and its representative in Oregon, resulted in 1845 in McLoughlin's retirement from the H. B. C., a retirement which seems to have been little more than a summer dismissal.

In the meantime the American settlers, who had been coming into Oregon in ever-increasing numbers since 1842, had been beseeching Congress to guarantee their land titles on the Columbia and had taken steps to form a local government. McLoughlin had become involved in the political maneuverings incident to that action and made a number of enemies among the future leaders of the new American territory.

After retiring from the Hudson Bay company service he moved to the present site of Oregon City where "he had every reason to expect that his new neighbors, so extensively the recipients of his aid, would welcome him as a benefactor rather than spurn him as a failed aristocrat. He made the very human mistake of counting too heavily on the religious tolerance and anticipated gratitude of these people." For they were Protestants and he was a Catholic having returned once more to the religious faith of his youth; he was also a British subject and they were roused to a high pitch of patriotic ardor over the Oregon boundary dispute.

Although he immediately took steps to become an American citizen, his motives were suspected and there were numerous annoying delays before his final citizenship papers were signed. But even that did not end his troubles. American settlers had squatted on some of his lands and there were disputes over land titles. After Oregon became a territory, its first delegate to Congress, an enemy of the doctor, influenced the passage of legislation, the Oregon Domain Land Law, which charged McLoughlin out of real estate that was rightfully his.

No wonder that toward the close of his career the embittered old man penned these lines: "By British demagogues I have been represented as a traitor. For what? Because I acted as a Christian, saved American citizens, men, women and children from the Indian tomahawk and enabled them to take farms to support their families. American demagogues have been base enough to assert that I had caused American citizens to be massacred by hundreds by the savages. I, who saved all that I could. . . I could not have done more for the settlers if they had been brothers and sisters. . . To be brief, I founded this settlement and prevented a war. . . and for doing this peaceably and quietly, I was treated by the British in such a manner that, from self-respect, I resigned my situation in the Hudson's Bay company's service, by which I sacrificed $12,000 per annum, and the Oregon Land Bill shows the treatment I received from the Americans."

The end of his troubles came on September 3, 1857, when he died peacefully in his home in Oregon City. Five years later the Oregon legislature made partial amends for the injustices he had suffered by passing an act which permitted his heirs to acquire all of his original land claims, with the exception of one island, upon the payment of $1,000 which was designated for the University Fund of Oregon.

Although he is generally called as the "Father of Oregon," no monument in keeping with his importance in the history of the Pacific Northwest has ever been erected in his memory. The simple, white-plastered home dwelling in Oregon City where he spent his last days is preserved as a museum and a memorial to him. The inscription on his old-fashioned tombstone, set in the brick foundations of the brown-painted Catholic church where he lies buried, records the fact that he was "The Pioneer and Friend of Oregon. Also the founder of this city."

The magnificent column at Astoria, Ore., honors the names of Capt. Robert Gray, of Lewis and Clark and of John Jacob Astor but not that of Dr. John McLoughlin. The monument at Wharfedale, Wash., lists his name along with 40 "distinguished pathfinders and pioneers" of varying importance. On a grassy plot within the city limits of Vancouver, Wash., stands a hexagonal marker, on one face of which is this simple inscription: "Under the influence of Dr. John McLoughlin (sic), manager of the Hudson's Bay company, civilization of Washington started at Vancouver, A. D. 1825." Meager as is this tribute, they might at least have spelled correctly the name of the man of whom this latest biographer says: "Of all the heroic figures of the early West, Dr. John McLoughlin was the most remarkable. As a leader, a benefactor and a Christian, he was unrivaled, and though his life ended in tragedy, the passage of time has not only enhanced his greatness but placed him with the charmed circle of our national heroes."

Many Have Achieved Fame While in Their Twenties

Records of World's Notables Are Encouragement to Today's Youth.

Ambitious youth seeking to find their place early in life, in a maladjusted world will find encouragement if they will take a look into the pages of history. E. B. Detroit, California Boy Scout executive, in the Historian Magazine tells of a few of the young men and women who have "done big things."

William Pitt, Mr. DeGroot cites as his first example, filled the responsible post of chancellor of the exchequer at twenty-three and served as prime minister of Great Britain at twenty-four. George Washington was only twenty-three when he led the Virginia troops against the Indians and French. Abraham Lincoln campaigned for public office at twenty-four. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote "Treasure Island" at twenty-three. Galileo at nineteen proved that equations higher than the fifth order could not be solved algebraically, and thereby advanced the theory of groups for the solution of higher equations.

Westinghouse invented the air brake at twenty-three. Alexander the Great conquered and ruled the world before he was thirty. Sir Isaac Newton at twenty-four formulated the law of gravitation. Whiteley at twenty-two was the first to use the Young Service and when he invented the cotton gin, Charles Dickens wrote "Oliver Twist" at twenty-five. Napoleon at twenty-seven was in command of the Italian army. Patrick Henry was but twenty-seven when he made his conquering and historic speech against the Stamp Act. Thomas Edison was not far above the Young Service age when he designated by Rotary (twenty-four years), when he astonished and benefited mankind with many of his inventions.

Paul Siple, an Eagle Scout, was only twenty when he qualified for an important post on the first expedition of Admiral Byrd to the Antarctic region and he was chief biologist on the second Byrd expedition. The average age of the members of America's Continental Congress was thirty-five. Two of its members, at least, were under thirty—Edward Rutledge, twenty-five, and John Jay, twenty-nine.

Ladberg immortalized himself at twenty-five; moreover the best of it

300 poems on the Lindbergh flight across the Atlantic in 1927 was written by Nathalia Crane, a fourteen-year-old girl of Brooklyn, N. Y. And so on, almost without end could we record the achievements and services of youth in the fields of statesmanship, literature, science, education, invention and courage.—Kansas City Times.

Progress Made in Berlin Preparatory to Olympics

The Olympic games will take place in the 39-acre Reichsportfeld situated in the west end of Berlin. The huge stadium, which is 85 per cent completed, has seats for 191,000 spectators. The stadium arena contains a running track 400 meters long. The swimming stadium contains a 65-165 foot pool, a large restaurant overlooking the pool. The Dietrich-Eckert open-air theater in the form of a Greek bowl will be used for dramatic productions and assemblies. The Olympic hall which will open the games in August, the altar on the stadium tower will be lighted on August 1, this year, by the Olympic fire, the flame of which will be brought from the site of the original Olympic games by 3,000 runners who will travel in relays.—Washington Star.

Law of Progress Progress invented the great loom, harnessed the spinning wheel, and the same law of progress has made the woman of today a different woman from her grandmother—both the best of their time.

DOCTORS KNOW

Mothers read this:

TO RELIEVING CONSTIPATION
A cleansing dose today; a smaller quantity tomorrow; less each time, until bowels need no help at all.

Why do people come home from a hospital with bowels working like a well-regulated watch?

The answer is simple, and it's the answer to all your bowel worries if you will only realize it: many doctors use only liquid laxatives.

If you know what a doctor knows, you would use only the liquid form. A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the secret of any real relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular liquid laxatives have become. They give the right kind of help, and right amount of help. The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara—both natural laxatives that can form no habit, even in children. So, try Syrup Pepsin. You just take regulated doses till bowels perform beautifully.

Boone County Farm Notes

H. R. Forkner, County Agent

30 Attend Poultry School

Thirty Boone County poultrymen attended the Annual poultry school held at Burlington last Friday. The attendance was good considering the weather and road conditions.

Lessons were given on good discussions of their poultry problems. Prof. Jim Humphrey of the College pointed out there would likely be an increase in poultry production this year but good practices will pay a profit.

Mr. Forkner advised on means of securing better hatches and stronger chicks thru use of vaccination in the flocks. Control of mites and flies was considered essential in parasite control by Dr. T. T. Forkner. He recommended the use of the government fly trap as one help in control of flies.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Clark were appointed on a committee to arrange for a summer tour and field meeting to study poultry and disease control practices.

Community Planning Meetings. Leading Boone County farmers will meet in a series of community planning meetings during the week. The purpose of these meetings will be to plan an agricultural improvement program to be carried out in each of the various communities during 1936.

The place and date of the meetings to be held are as follows: New Haven, at school house, Thursday, Jan. 23rd at 1:15 p. m.

Hamilton, at school house, Thursday, Jan. 23rd at 7:30 p. m.

Grant, at Grant Bank, Friday, Jan. 24th at 1:30 p. m.

Burlington, County Agent's Office, Saturday, Jan. 25th at 7:00 p. m.

Hooper, at Hooper Bank, Monday, Jan. 27th at 7:30 p. m.

All farmers interested in local community agricultural improvement programs are invited to attend. A chairman will be elected at each community meeting to help plan and organize the county agricultural improvement program for 1936.

Note—Walton, Verona, Petersburg and Florence meetings were held last week.

Boone County. (The first of a series of short articles about Boone County, Kentucky—U. S. census figures used by County Agent in supply data.)

Population—1930, 11,000 people; 1920, 9,585 people.

Farms—1924, 1,644 farms; 1924, 1,624 farms. Approximate number of owners, 1,173; 1934 number of people living on farms, 5,935.

Kerr-Smith Tax in Force. The Kerr-Smith tax on non-signing tobacco is still in force and being collected according to official reports received at the County Agent's office the past week. Contract growers who sell excess tobacco are also required to purchase excess allotment cards.

The purchase of excess allotment cards at the county office the past few days has been larger since the opening of the tobacco season. Contract signers are advised to sell no tobacco that is not recorded on their allotment cards, as so doing will violate their contracts. While it is not known, there is a possibility that the remaining payments due may be paid.

Contract signers who did not sell up to their allotment may be benefited more by selling their remaining allotment to a contract signer who has excess tobacco to sell than a producer with excess buys the unused allotment of a deficiency producer. It is necessary that both parties call at the county agent's office to make this transfer.

NOTICE

On February 3, 1936, the undersigned as administrators with the will attached of W. F. Moore, will file a final settlement in the Boone County Court.

And let us forget, let us mention the P. T. A. program for this Thursday night. If you're looking for an evening of fun, look in on the Hamilton auditorium about 7:30, Thursday night.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Theodore Roosevelt once said, "I wish to preach not the doctrine of ignoble ease, but that of a strenuous life."

That the late president, whose 70th birthday anniversary the nation observes, Oct. 27th, practiced what he preached is a matter of history. Fighter, lawyer, statesman, he was a man of boundless energy and forceful character whom nothing could stop in achieving his goal!

An inspiring example of what indomitable Will Power can do. Follow it. Determine Financial Independence shall be yours and don't let up until you've attained it. SAVING and INVESTING YOUR MONEY WISELY is the surest way! Let us advise you!

LEXINGTON, KY.

The Lexington market, largest in the entire belt, has sold this season, through last week, a total of 41,373,442 pounds of tobacco for an average of $21.29 a hundred—High basket $64, high crop $47.52.

And Lexington has recorded this high average despite the fact that its tobacco has come from every section in which burley tobacco is grown.

Lexington offers the growers of burley tobacco more room for the proper handling of their crop, more buyers to bid on their crop, and more profit from the sale of their crop.

And it is because of these advantages that Lexington is the largest market in the entire burley belt—because Lexington is the highest market in the entire belt.

Abraham Lincoln Goes to Washington

Abraham Lincoln (FROM PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN IN JANUARY, 1861)

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

February 12, 1908... a red-letter day in America's calendar... a holiday in most of the states of the Union... a day of remembrance, of eulogy, of "flinging his name against the stars."

For this is Lincoln's birthday. But let us go back to another Lincoln's birthday... to February 12, 1861.

A short, little locomotive with a flat-topped smokestack, is puffing along the single track that winds among the gently-rolling hills of Ohio. Back there in one of the wooden coaches a tall, gaunt man sits by a window gazing out over the bleak winter landscape.

Yesterday he had stood on the rear platform of a train at the brick railway station in Springfield, Ill. A crowd of nearly a thousand people, silent, bareheaded in the cold, drizzle of rain, had listened to these words:

"Friends, as one who has never been placed in a like position can understand my feelings at this hour nor the oppressive sadness I feel at this parting. For more than a quarter of a century I have lived among you, and during all that time I have received nothing but kindness at your hands."

"Here I have lived from my youth till now I am an old man. Here the most sacred trusts of earth were assumed; here all my children were born; and here one of them lies buried. To you, dear friends, I owe all that I have, all that I am. All the strange checkered past seems to crowd now upon my mind."

"Today I have you; I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon General Washington. Unless the great God who assisted him shall be with aid me, I must fail. But if the same omniscient God and the same almighty arm that directed and protected him shall guide and support me, I shall not fail; I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To Him I commend you all. Permit me to ask that with equal sincerity and faith you will all invoke His wisdom and guidance for me."

"With these few words I must leave you—for how long, I know not. Friends, one and all, I must now bid you an affectionate farewell."

"Now I am an old man," he had said. Yes, Abraham Lincoln is fifty-two years old this twelfth day of February, 1861. But he has come a long way in those 52 years.

This should be a happy birthday for Abraham Lincoln. But his three boys, Rob and Willie and Tad, hear the sigh that escapes from his lips as he turns from the window and they hush their noisy play. And Mary Todd Lincoln sees in the deepest eyes that look of sadness which will shadow the face of this "Man of Sorrows" for the next four years.

Yes, he is President-elect of the United States of America... or should he say "The Disunited States?"

Six weeks after his election South Carolina had passed its ordinance of secession. During the next month Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Florida had followed the Palmetto state's lead. On February 4 representatives from these states had met at Montgomery, Ala., and organized the "Confederate States of America."

Five more, Texas, North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Arkansas, were almost certain to join the six that had already departed from the Union. The future course of three "border states," Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri, as well as the northern slave state of Delaware, was doubtful. And always in the background loomed the threat of a fratricidal war between the North and the South.

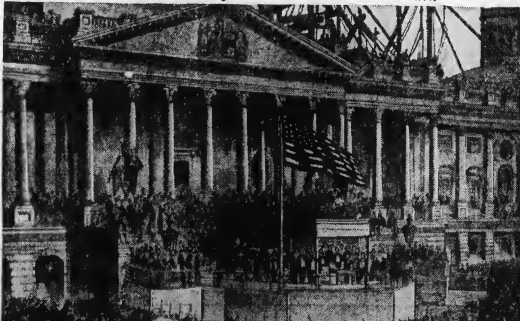

So much depended upon what he said and how he said it that he had toiled, night and day, for three weeks over his inaugural address.

"He wrote it as a composer writes a symphony," says Don Glassboro in the Washington Star. "He marshaled all the melody in words, all the rhythm of speech and euphony of language to build a monument out of cold syllables." He weighed every word on a musical scale. He employed them as full notes and half notes. He would pronounce each word separately and feel convinced of its necessity both as to thought and style. By the time he finished a sentence it would harbor no contradictory thought or coarse note. The words were riveted together, so that to strike out an adjective or syllable would upset the thought and leave a gaping hole in the sentence.

Ever since his election, his mail had been full of letters bearing southern postmarks. Some were signed with the names and addresses of the senders; others were anonymous. They were filled with such words as "Black Republican," "mulatto scamps," "jailbirds," "rascals" and "thieves."

"Cesar had his Brutus," Charles the First, his Cromwell. And the President may profit by

The First Inauguration (FROM AN OLD PICTURE)

Sir—This is to inform you that there is a club of 100 young men in this place who have sworn to murder you.

A Letter from the South

their example," warned another, which was signed "from one of a sworn band of 10 who have resolved to shoot you from the south side of the avenue in the inaugural procession on the fourth of March, 1861." And still another declared: "This is to inform you that there is a club of 100 young men in this place who have sworn to murder you."

It was hard for him to believe that anyone should desire his death. But conviction came at last. More disturbing, though, were the rumors of men in high places who were about to turn traitor to their country and who might have guilty knowledge of plans for reducing it to a state of anarchy. So he sent the adjutant-general to Illinois to Washington to sound out Gen. Winfield Scott, head of the army. Scott was a Virginian and his loyalty was suspected. Back came the reply from that doughty old fighter: "Tell Mr. Lincoln that, if necessary, I'll plant cannon at both ends of Pennsylvania avenue, and if any show their heads or even venture to raise a finger, I'll blow 'em to hell!"

But not even such reassurance could bring peace to Lincoln's troubled mind. As the train bore him nearer and nearer to the capital and to the day when he would take the oath of office, his despair deepened.

"To the anxious, listening country his speeches on the journey to Washington were disappointing," writes Nathaniel W. Stephenson in "The Chronicles of America." "Perhaps his strangely sensitive mind felt too powerfully the fatefulness of the moment and reacted with a sort of lightness that did not really represent the real man."

Arriving in Philadelphia he was informed that Allan Pinkerton's Secret Service men had uncovered indisputable evidence of a well-laid plot to assassinate him. He was urged to leave the City of Brotherly Love that night. His reply was: "I have promised to raise the flag over Independence hall tomorrow morning and visit the legislature at Harrisburg. Beyond that I have no engagements."

After the Harrisburg reception a special train consisting of a locomotive, baggage car and coach sped back to Philadelphia. There Allan Pinkerton met the President-elect with a well-guarded carriage in which he was taken swiftly across the city to another station where he boarded a sleeping car.

On the morning of February 23 the wires hummed with the news that the new President had made a secret entrance into the capital. The Prince of Italy sneaked in under the cover of night," sneered some of his enemies. Others called him "that Illinois ape."

Thus Abraham Lincoln came to Washington. Never before nor since has a President-elect entered the nation's capital to assume the duties of his high office under such circumstances.

The next eight days were a nightmare—of persistent annoyance by a horde of job-seekers, of rumors of disasters that were about to befall, of threats, of secessions, of countless indignities.

March 4 dawned a "blue Monday." It had been raining. Pennsylvania avenue was a broad highway of slatted mud. Silence hung heavy over the crowd muffled around the Willard hotel as President-elect Lincoln entered an open barouche and started up the avenue toward the Capitol. Shrapnel shots were stationed on the house-tops with orders to sweep the avenue with their fire if there was any uprising. In the side streets troops were massed ready for action. Other detachments were stationed beside the Capitol steps and near the north entrance a battery of artillery was ready to unleash a blast of death if need be.

Still unfinished, the Capitol dome was surrounded by huge derricks held in place by steel cables. "People might have drawn a striking parallel between the condition of the republic and its chief building,"... On a level with the spectators stood the bronze figure of Liberty which would later surmount the dome. Perhaps she was making silent appeal to the man in black.

He stepped forward until he stood beneath a canopy supported by the Stars and Stripes. For the first time a wave of cheering swept over the crowd of 30,000 massed on the Capitol steps and in front.

"Fellow citizens of the United States!" There was emphasis on that word "United." The murmur of the crowd was hushed as his firm, clear, far-carrying voice went on: "The Union will endure forever... no state upon its own mere motion can lawfully get out of the Union... I therefore consider that the Union is unbroken... there need be no bloodshed or violence... in your hands, my disaffected countrymen, and not in mine, lies the momentous question of civil war... The government will not assault you... You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the government, while I shall have the solemn one to 'preserve, protect and defend'..."

And so on to the end: "We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

A roar of applause... from friend and enemy alike. Chief Justice Taney stepped forward holding a gold-clasped Bible. Then two men repeated together: "I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States. So help me God!"

Abraham Lincoln was President of the United States.

It was in his spare time that Benjamin Franklin discovered the power of electricity and laid the foundation for the vast electrical development today.

It was in their spare time that most of the great men of the country got their education, or supplemented them so that they could get some use of their intelligence.

Trotting around night after night seeking amusement is one of the surest ways to acquire mediocrity that has yet been discovered.

Budget your time. Decide how much you will use working and how much having fun.

Fun is useful and necessary. Use too much of it consumes more time than you really have to spare. Don't be an "amusement bound." Take your pleasures in moderation.

Uncommon Sense

A rich man can endow a laboratory or a hospital, but neither of them would be of any use to him.

The scientist, not for the self, but for the benefit of the world, is the real philanthropist.

He not only restores the ailing to good health but he contributes in one way or another to every activity which is for the betterment of the human race.

The scientist is not interested in outliving money.

He is interested in things that will make for the happiness and comfort of the men and women and children who compose mankind.

The country doctor as well as the noted specialist is a scientist.

The inventor is a scientist. Orville and Wilbur Wright, who had their beginnings in a little bicycle shop in a small Ohio town, were scientists.

It is quite possible that but for their studies of air currents that flying might have been years longer in coming than it did.

If this country ever engages in another war, which heaven forbid, it will be the scientist who will have more to do with the winning of it than the general.

The general may be ever so skillful in making ready for battle, but it is the high explosives in these days which count in war, and it is the scientist who has made high explosives and taught fighting men how to use them.

The scientist not only has knowledge, but he knows how to apply it. Without him the march of progress would not be possible.

Not long ago I visited the town where I was born.

When I left it we used cordwood for fire, got water from a pump outside the house, and if we took a journey we either rode on a train that was unable to go speed greater than twenty miles an hour, or on a backroad.

Flickering kerosene lamps were our only lighting systems.

Afterward when I visited the place its main street was brilliantly lighted, half the population owned motor cars, and there was an airport just outside the city limits by means of which one could fly almost wherever he chose.

Scientists as a rule are modest. They are too busy with their jobs to get publicity.

But they have been the real builders of the modern world.

Today business men are trying in every way to cut down waste.

Employees are called upon to do their duty.

Of all definite jobs, if they fail they must hunt for other jobs.

Machinery is kept in good condition even in Roman times, when blood men from the east of the Rhine already had invaded this basin. In Caesar's "Commentaries" you read of these early German warriors. One Roman report of the time says that 120,000 barbarians, ennobled of Gaul, had settled here.

Caesar feared these Germans might make himself, so he helped the Gauls drive them back across the Rhine. His battles on the Alsace and elsewhere were precursors of centuries of fighting along the Rhine.

Some Roman military roads hereabouts are shown on the Peutinger map of about 200 A. D. One ran north from Argentoratum (now Strasbourg) to the Saar basin.

About this same time the Romans built a castle at a point on the Saar river where it was bridged by their military road from Paris to Mainz. Saarbrücken was so named, meaning "Saar Bridge."

Dense forests choked all the basin then, forests frequented by heathen druids, by wild Celtic tribes who hunted deer and bears with spears. Scattered ruins of menhirs, dolmens and cromlechs, symbols of the druid cult, have been found in the Saar basin.

Roman ruins are there—if you dig—ruins of villas, of baths and bridges, some almost in the shadow of early Christian churches. At Tholey is a church that dates from the thirteenth century. In sharp contrast, near Saarbrücken is a mosque built by the French during the World War, wherein their Moroccan soldiers might pray.

The Saar

Industrial Panorama in the Saar.

Prepared by National Geographic Society.

THOUGH barely 738 square miles in area and with fewer than 250,000 people, the Saar has been one of Europe's most populated regions since the World War.

Powder keg of Europe; witches' cauldron; political soap spot. For years such graphic labels have been tacked onto this small but highly industrialized region lying north of Alsace-Lorraine between France and Germany.

From the days of Attila and the Caesars down to Foch and Von Hindenburg, its valleys and wooded hills have echoed and echoed to the tramp and shouts of marching armies.

Geographically, the Saar is an irregular patch of hilly land crossed by small valleys. It lies longslender Luxembourg, a buffer state between France and Germany, and was cut from the two German states of Prussia and Bavaria.

With a population about equal to that of London proper, it shelters more than 1,000 people per square mile—one of the most densely settled areas in all Europe.

Only such miniature European states as Andorra, Liechtenstein, San Marino and Monaco are smaller than this tiny, yet dynamic country. America knows no state so densely populated as about three times the Saar's size, yet has less than a third its population.

Saarbrücken, metropolis of the Saar, has only 132,400 people. In one year Saar trains haul 60,000,000 passengers!

Sit in any stuffy cafe at Saarbrücken, watch the guests eat red cabbage and boiled pork, or sip flatulent beer as the band plays heavy Wagner music, and the place seems just another German provincial center.

Yet look into its eventful annals, or make a careful trip about its historic ruins and ruins, and you find a land with a past peculiar to itself.

Saar Problem in Caesar's Time.

There was, in fact, a Saar problem even in Roman times, when blood men from the east of the Rhine already had invaded this basin. In Caesar's "Commentaries" you read of these early German warriors. One Roman report of the time says that 120,000 barbarians, ennobled of Gaul, had settled here.

Long Held by Germans.

Strategically, the Saar lies on a natural route between France and Germany, and for centuries they have disputed as to where their boundary lines should be fixed. Soon after the break up of Charlemagne's empire, and the Treaty of Verdun in 843, the Saar became German soil.

Briefly, for more than a thousand years prior to the Versailles treaty, Germany held the Saar, except for two short periods, the second being the years from 1793 to 1813, when Napoleon pushed the French frontier to the Rhine.

When Blucher and his Prussians advanced into France in 1813, he followed the very route taken by the German hordes when the Roman empire fell.

It was so in the Franco-Prussian war; Von Moltke, in 1870, followed Blucher's route of 1813, and about Saarbrücken came one of the first clashes of that war which helped Bismarck to found his German empire. Again, of course, in the World War, the armies passed this way, and many an allied soldier was killed in the Saar, the Moselle and the Rhine, or traded cigarettes and white bread to willing francs for a jug of wine.

Fly over Saarbrücken, where Marshal Ney was born, and in its very heart you see the outline of the old forts built by Louis XIV of France.

During, as a town, from 1659, its people lived for more than 250 years almost wholly by trading with the garrisons—first French, then German, then French again.

Today old walls and mounds that encircled the fort have been torn down and filled to make broad, smooth streets, as the Americans did with streets of Manila.

German infantry, artillery, cavalry, army wagons—all the money-spending machinery of war—made Saarbrücken a busy town until after the World War. When they evacuated, the French came in for a while, but now few occupants are found for all the vast barracks.

It is quiet, almost too quiet, for those residents who remember the hand concerts, the Hitlerian rallies, and fat army pay rolls of other days.

French Are Scarce There.

German in price, speech, culture, and traditions—the Saar—showed by a pre-war census only about one person in 200 with French as his native tongue. It was simply a legal accident at Versailles which made these people citizens, temporarily, of a phantom state. The Saar, under that treaty, gained no nationality, no president or other rights of its own. To pay France, a commission of five Europeans was named by the League of Nations to administer the territory's affairs until the plebiscite.

By treaty the Saar went under a customs union with France; French customs guards were set to patrol the line between Germany and the Saar and French money was used into the territory.

For her own coal mines damaged by Germans in the World War, she was given the coal mines in the Saar. The treaty provided also that after the plebiscite Germany might buy these mines back again if she wished, and such an agreement was concluded late in 1934.

Only around Saarbrücken is any French influence noticeable, and that is not due to the presence there of many living Frenchmen. Such influence belongs to the past—Yanbu, the French name for the town, was built under the French name XIV made this a French garrison town; French names and epithets in the cemetery; and an odd local dialect current among older residents, a curious blend of German and French.

To see how thoroughly German the region is, in speech and sentiment, you have only to mingle with any holiday crowd and listen to the songs, the speeches, and the music; or read the papers; or see what crowds follow broadcasts from the radio stations at Frankfurt and Stuttgart.

Industry Is Intensive.

As in the Ruhr, industry here is compact, intensive, and theatrical in its setting.

Like volcanoes, its giant mills, as at Volklingsen (250,000), belch forth clouds of thick gray smoke; the red glare of blast-furnaces turns black night into brilliant Gehenna.

Under every hill is coal. Over every mine is a big wheel on a tower; again and again you see the big wheel spin, as it winds up a cable that lifts its load from deep in the earth.

This is the only place on earth where you see mines and steel mills closely crowded by forests and fields of industrial Pittsburgh were set in one of our forest reserves. The wooded slopes of the winding Saar river are covered with snow and resemble Algonquin park in Ontario in winter; it seems the woods must be as dense and mysterious as when druids built their sacred groves there and hungry pagan Celts searched for wild meat.

Reduction Made In Long Distance Telephone Rates

Special Sunday rates for long distance calls and also, reduced person-to-person rates, after seven o'clock every evening have been placed in effect by the Bell Telephone Company, according to E. G. Stephenson, manager of the Consolidated Telephone Company.

Before these new rates became effective, night rates were available only on long distance calls from (station-to-station). Now, calls made to a particular person (person-to-person) also are reduced after 7 p. m. In addition, the night rates on both types of calls are in effect all day Sunday, and include tolls from 7 p. m. Saturday until 4:30 a. m. Monday.

THE "INVENTOR" OF THE TYPEWRITER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE EICK and clatter of the keys were silenced as the visitors gathered around the desk from which the noise came.

"What are you doing?" "I'm writing an article on the typewriter."

"I know you are... I can see that for myself. But what's it about?"

"Oh, now I understand! You're writing an article about the typewriter on the typewriter. But why?"

"Well, you see, February 14 happens to be the anniversary of the birth of Christopher Latham Sholes and he..."

"Oh yes, he was the chap who invented the typewriter, wasn't he?"

"That depends upon what you mean when you say 'inventor' because..."

Yes, a great deal does depend upon the definition of that word! At least a dozen men did the pioneering work that eventually resulted in the modern high-speed writing machine and each of them has some claim to the title of "father of the typewriter" or to the honor of being its "inventor."

Probably the first effort to produce a writing machine was made by an English engineer named Henry Mill in 1714. A patent issued to him by Queen Anne on January 7 of that year states that he "invented and brought to perfection an artificial machine or method for the impression or transcribing of letters simply or progressively, and in another, as in writing, whereby all writings whatsoever may be engraved in paper or parchment so neat and exact as not to be distinguished from print; that said machine or method may be of great use in settlements and public records, the impression being deeper and more lasting than other writing, and not to be erased or counterfeited without manifest discovery."

Except for this patent, which is filed in the British patent office there is, however, no other record of the principles of operation of Mill's machine. The same is true of a writing machine which is said to have been invented in France in 1784. So neither Mill nor this unknown Frenchman have any valid claim to the title of "inventor" of the typewriter.

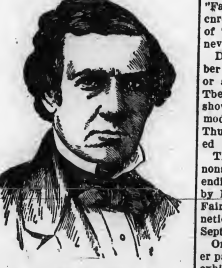

First Claimant.

The first real claimant to that title was an American—William Austin Burt, a native of Massachusetts, where he was born June 13, 1792, but a citizen of Michigan in 1829 when he invented his "typographer." At any rate the records of his invention in the United States patent office declares that "this patent discloses the actual construction of a typewriter machine for the first time in any country." It then describes the working of the "typographer" as follows: "The type are arranged on the under side of a segment carried by a lever pivoted to swing vertically and horizontally."

"The desired character is brought to the printing point by moving this lever horizontally to a position over the same character in the index, and the impression is made by then depressing the lever."

"Several styles of type may be used and they are arranged in two rows on the lever. These rows of type can be shifted on the lever to bring either one to the printing point."

"The paper is carried on an endless band which travels crosswise on the machine, and this band is moved for letter spacing by the impression lever every time the lever is depressed to print.

"The line space is made by shifting the frame carrying the printing mechanism toward the front or rear of the machine, the paper remaining stationary."

"Ink pads are located at each side of the impression point, the type, except the one in printing position, are inked every time the impression lever is depressed."

"A dial is provided which indicates the length of paper in inches which has passed the printing point in printing each line, and as the operator knows the width of the paper being used, the time to stop printing at the end of the line is indicated."

Miss Eileen Donohue as she appeared in the costume of the seventies, in a skit presented by the New York Y. W. C. A. as a part of the celebration in 1933 to mark the sixtieth anniversary of the invention of the typewriter and the entrance of women into the modern business world. The typewriter shown in this picture is the original model perfected by Christopher Latham Sholes from which the first manufactured machine was copied.

Principle Reversed. This indicates that the principle of Burt's machine was the reverse of that on modern machines. In the "typographer," the type moved at the imprint of each letter until the end of the line was reached and, instead of returning the carriage, as is done on a modern typewriter, the frame carrying the printing mechanism was shifted back to the starting point while the paper itself remained motionless. Burt obtained type for his machine from John Shetton, editor and proprietor of the Detroit Gazette, and Shetton on May 25, 1829, wrote the first letter on the new contraption. It was addressed to Martin Van Buren, then secretary of state, and said:

"This is a specimen of printing done by me on Mr. Burt's typographer. You will observe some inaccuracies in the situation of the letters. These are owing to the imperfections of the machine; it having been made in the woods of Michigan, where no proper tools could be obtained by the inventor, who, in the construction of it, merely sought to test the principles of it, therefore, making little pains in making it. I am satisfied from my knowledge of the printing business as well as from the operation of the rough machine, with which I am printing, that the typographer will be ranked with the most novel, useful and pleasing invention of the age."

On July 23, 1829, patent No. 200, signed by President Andrew Jackson and Secretary Van Buren, was granted to Burt for his "typographer." The original model of the machine was lost in the fire of December 15, 1836, which destroyed the patent office and all its contents.

Found No Market. Burt's invention was so far in advance of the times that it found no market, so he turned his attention to other things. Among them was the invention of the solar compass, an instrument, which made variations of a magnetic needle, due to local causes, and which in internal improvements in Michigan, the latter included a project for a canal around the falls in St. Mary's river, the forerunner of the present canal at Sault Ste. Marie, so Burt's fame as "Father of the Bow Canal" is as great even if his right to the title of "Father of the Typewriter" has never been firmly established.

During the next few years a number of writing machines of one sort or another made their appearance. The first of these, and one which showed a nearer approach to the modern typewriter, was Charles Thurber's printer which he patented August 28, 1843. The first machine to use continuous roll paper feed, instead of an endless strip of tape, as originated by Burt, was invented by John B. Fairbanks, who produced his "phonetic" writing machine, patented September 17, 1850.

On May 20, 1856, John H. Cooper patented a writing machine which exhibited for the first time the principle of the Scientific American, editor of the Scientific American, brought out a mechanical writer, whose principle was to record raised letters instead of printing them. It contained the first alphabet of type bars in a circle, delivering their impression on a common center.

First Portable. In 1857, Dr. S. W. Francis of New York made the first of writing machines the plan of which was patented for the first time. This greatly simplified the method of striking the keys.

Sholes developed his paging machine, was added to the group of experimenters in the little machine shop, and proved quite a handy man, both in carrying out ideas and in suggesting the big idea and to him the invention of the first practical typewriter is credited."

John Alden Descendant.

Sholes was a descendant of John and Priscilla Alden, and was born in Columbia county, Pennsylvania, February 14, 1819. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to the editor of the Blue Hill (Pa.) Intelligencer to learn the printing business, but at the age of eighteen he decided to join his brother, who was then living in Green Bay, Wis.

Two years later Sholes went to Madison and took charge of the Wisconsin Inquirer, owned by his brother, Charles, and in 1840 he edited the Southport (later Kenosha) Telegraph. Four years later he became the postmaster there and after moving to Milwaukee was postmaster in that city. He was also editor of the Sentinel and the News, and commissioner of public works and collector of customs. It was during his career in this office that he became interested in making a numbering machine and working with the other two men in their little machine shop on a writing machine.

A One-Letter Affair.

The first machine which he invented was a simple one-letter affair, made with an inked ribbon for recording the letters and characters. In the meantime another American, living in England, was working on an invention which was to have a direct bearing upon the development of the typewriter in its present form and to give him a strong claim to the title of "inventor of the typewriter." He was John Pratt, born in Unstow, S. C., April 14, 1831, and, for several years after his graduation from Cokesbury college in 1849, a journalist and editor in the South.

In 1864 Pratt and his wife went to England, where he devoted his attention to perfecting a writing machine which he called the "typewriter" for which he was granted a British patent in 1869. According to the National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, which calls him the "inventor of the typewriter" and which says that his was "the first working typewriter that ever secured a sale," Pratt claimed four operations of his purpose. They were:

"That it was necessary to bring into one of a number of types at the will of the operator, and in arbitrary succession, to common point; to form a colored or other, legible character at that common point; to feed the paper across the common point so as to make proper intervals between letters and the words; to prepare a device for bringing the paper readily and speedily back to its starting point, with an interval between the lines."

In 1867 his machine was exhibited before the Society of Arts and a paper read by the inventor before that society was printed in its journal. In that same year also he made and sold several of his machines in London, among the purchasers being Sir Charles Wheatstone and Dr. Benze Jones, the author of a "Life of Newton."

Three "Cranks." But more important still in the history of the typewriter was the fact that during the winter of 1868, in a little machine shop in the outskirts of the city of Milwaukee, Wis., "three middle-aged, thoughtful and hard-working men, looked upon as 'cranks' by their neighbors, were each hard at work on a pet invention of his own."

So says the "History of the Typewriter" issued by the Historical society of Herkimer county, New York, in 1923. It continues:

"One of these men, Christopher Latham Sholes, a printer and newspaper man, was engaged in developing a machine for numbering serially the pages of blank books. In this work he had interested one of the others, Samuel W. Soule, while the third of the group, Carlos Glidden, while the paging machine was nearing completion. 'Why cannot such a machine be made that will write letters and words and not figures only?' A question in the mind of the Scientific American, editor of the Scientific American, brought out a mechanical writer, whose principle was to record raised letters instead of printing them. It contained the first alphabet of type bars in a circle, delivering their impression on a common center."

"Then a chance visit to the Milwaukee machine shop of one William G. LaDue, who had for many years been dreaming of the invention of a 'typewriter' resulted in a circuit of suggestion that set Sholes, Glidden and Soule to working wholeheartedly, and to the exclusion of everything else. 'What idea. A practical mechanic, Matt Schwaibach, who had helped

Uncommon Sense

The machine that carries around the entity that is that is delicate and complicated.

Beware of Repair Bills and it will be in trouble. You can never do your best work when you are ill or out of sorts. You can get no action out of your brain if you engage in receiving messages from an aching head or a stomach upset.

If you feel listless and indifferent, and fall to liking your work, better see your doctor.

He will go over you carefully, and in most cases find that the trouble is due to overeating and lack of exercise.

His advice. Be more careful about your food and drink. You probably eat too much of too flat. Most hard workers do. Find out what you ought to drink.

If need be, get a thorough overhauling.

After you have had it make sure that your habits are regular, that you eat the right amount of food and no more.

Everybody worries a little now and then.

Most human machinery goes along at a pretty steady gait unless you put sand in the gears in one way or another.

When it stalls and refuses to go without a struggle, have your self examined.

Do not, as many people do, refuse to see a doctor because you are afraid he may tell you that something is seriously wrong with you.

If something is wrong with you, the sooner you know it and do something about it, the sooner can the trouble be overcome.

A medical friend of mine told me long ago that at least three-quarters of the people who come to him to be treated would have remained in good health if they had taken the right kind of exercise, enough of it, and eaten about half as much as they did.

Reduce your food and increase your exercise, if you want to be well.

And you ought to want to be well. For when the repair bills begin to come in from the doctor's office and the hospital then you really will have something to worry about.

Repairing a car is expensive, as you probably know, but repairing a human body runs into big money.

Persistence—I was interested, of course, in the animals, and the herculean labors performed by the canvasmen. In getting up the "Big Top"—in fact, in the whole business of building a city of canvas in a spot which the natives before had been a stretch of prairie land.

But most of all I was interested in the love that everybody, from the tent-maker to the leading equestrienne, had for the job he or she followed.

As soon as the circus entered a town, and the equipment trucks, with the aid of horses, trucks, elephants, unloaded on the lot, everybody was ready for the morning task.

When the canvas roof was in place, I wandered around under the tent. Everywhere somebody was working at something or other, trying out something new.

The aerialists were high up under the roof practicing new tricks, doing them wrongly, and then doing them endlessly over and over again.

The lion tamer was teaching one of his pets to do something new with a large ball.

The alert creature would stand beside him, follow his every direction as expressed with a little prod, then first cumberously and then deftly perform the trick.

I have watched actors in rehearsals on the stage, I have seen ballet players coached by a petulant manager, but never before did I see such teamwork, such eagerness, such a sincere desire to do new and difficult tricks as I did see under that tent, long before the actors had had their breakfast.

And I thought at the time if school teachers could take their young charges to a circus at that hour in the morning, and see the patience and the zeal that they gave to their work, it would be more instructive than many lectures.

These men had to keep the interest of their great audience, or lose their jobs.

They had to give all their attention to what they did, or they would be speedily dropped.

Some Club Luncheon Ideas for the Puzzled Hostess

It Is a Sensible Custom to Serve at Regular Meal Hour.

Herewith is given a menu for a very simple club luncheon, to be served before the afternoon bridge. It is a sensible custom to serve a luncheon at a regular meal hour instead of refreshments at an hour which will be so near dinner time that appetite is lost.

Another good reason for serving luncheon is that most women feel it necessary to get home before the children's supper hour, and when there is a distance to be traveled, they are anxious to leave as soon as the game is over.

As far as the hostess herself is concerned, it is usually easier for her to serve before bridge than after. She can then play her coffee without worry as to whether the coffee is boiling over or the sandwiches dry-rotted.

For a club that is original in its idea of what may be served at luncheon, the hostess of the day invited the eight members to a breakfast party served at ten o'clock. She provided menu as a fruit course and then served coffee, small baked sausages, creamed potatoes and waffles. There were plenty of waffles and they made the dessert as well when the strup was passed.

Another woman, who had been sent a Virginia ham from her southern home, gave her guests ham and eggs and hot waffles with grapefruit as a starter.

The clever hostess does not feel that she must follow accepted formulas for refreshments for her parties, and her guests always agree with her.

1 can boiling water
1 tablespoon gelatin
1 cup cold water

Find 800-Year-Old "Bowl"
Where Games Were Played
Discovery of a large oval "bowl" where prehistoric America's exciting games were played 800 years ago was announced at Flagstaff, Ariz., by Dr. Harold S. Colton of the Museum of Northern Arizona.

The discovery, pronounced amazing, was made in northern Arizona near Flagstaff, by a joint expedition of the Museum and Arizona State Teachers College of Flagstaff, led by J. C. McGregor.

The find surprises archeologists, because never before has it been realized that ball games—national sport of Mexico—were popular over so wide an area of ancient America.

The game court now excavated is an oval bowl about 100 feet long and 46 feet wide, with slightly pointed ends. The sloping sides, Doctor Colton said, must have been seven or eight feet high, and the floor was level. A goal was made of four rocks in the floor—Science Service.

Ant Oddities

Fight to the Finish Between Red and Black Ants.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—W. N. S. Service.

LIKE humans, there are all kinds of ants—busy ants and ants that live on the accomplishments of others.

One often feels sorry for some of the industrious species of Formica, solid citizens, but really the "forgotten ants," because they seem to be preyed upon by every sort of warrior ant and their nests are nearly always shared with various guests and parasites.

Two kinds of ants, very different from each other, sometimes live together amicably, each occupying a separate part of the same nest and contributing to the general welfare.

The little shampoo ant (Leptothorax emersoni), discovered by Dr. William Morton Wheeler of Harvard in the peat bogs of Connecticut, lives in the nests of Myrmica canadensis, a much larger species. When the Leptothorax worker needs food, it approaches the Myrmica worker and proceeds to shampoo and lick it. The Myrmica obviously enjoys this, for it regurgitates food to the Leptothorax.

One day in Brazil a scientist was investigating an ant nest consisting of a mass of earth six inches in diameter in a fork of a tree. He tapped this nest gently with his forefinger, and the surface was immediately covered with small, reddish-brown ants of the genus Dolichoderus. When he dug into the nest to find the various forms, a swarm of Odontomachus rushed out and one of them stung him. Odontomachus was a dozen times as big as the Dolichoderus and provided with strong biting jaws and a red-hot sting.

Finding a Rare Ant. Often ant hunters get as big a thrill from a successful search for a rare ant as a big game hunter from the capture of giraffes or elephants. There is about as much physical exertion involved, too, turning over thousands of stones and logs, digging into the earth, chopping hard wood, and smelling bark from innumerable dead trees.

Luck infrequently plays an important part. In 1901 Father Schmitt, a Jesuit missionary, sent to the great myrmecologist, Porel, of Switzerland, a single specimen of a new and extraordinary ant from Haiti. Porel described it and named the genus after his good friend, Carl Emery of Bologna, and the species after the Jesuit (Emeryella schmitti). The lone specimen was long the only representative of its kind in collections.

In Haiti at the end of a month's work a student found one solitary worker along a roadside. He had a fine-tooth comb with him, but for two months he tried every other method he knew of to discover the nest of more of the workers. Then one evening he went for a stroll just before dinner and noticed on the path a millipede, or thousand-legger, moving in an unnatural way. Bending over, he saw that the millipede was dead and was being carried by an ant. This ant was Emeryella!

It took all his strength of character to keep from seizing both ant and prey at once, but he saved his pipe as calmly as he could and watched the ant till it leisurely entered a small hole at one side of a fat stone.

When the stone was turned over there was an entire colony of some sixty workers. Later, in the same locality, he found a similar colony, and specimens of these have now been distributed to all the important ant collections in museums all over the world.

No Female of the Species. There were no females in either nest; so it is not improbable that this species lacks a special female, and that one of the workers functions as egg-layer. At night there came to light in the student's quarters a red ant, which from its general character was assumed to be the male of the species.

He had talked about Emeryella schmitti so much that it became well known to the scant white population of the island under the name of "Mary Ella Schmitt," and when he finally reported his discovery there was a great celebration among his fellow Americans, railroad men vacationing at Port-au-Prince.

Another missionary priest, Pere Salle, had sent to the museum in Paris from Haiti a curious nest of vegetable fiber, not unlike a wasp's nest.

A scientist, while rummaging about among the specimens, found it and tapped it on a piece of white paper. Several dead and dried ants dropped out. They belonged to the genus Macromischa, the most exquisitely formed of the ants and with beautiful metallic coloration—purples, greens, and reds. The genus is interesting, too, because it alone of the ants of the West Indies has developed into numerous species. About thirty are known from Cuba alone.

Fire Ant Is a Stinger. The fire ant (Solenopsis geminata) is such a good traveler that one variety or another is found throughout the warmer parts of the earth. It gets its name from the painful, burning sting it can inflict. A colony contains vast numbers of workers. They have recently been reported as going great damage to young quail in the southeastern States.

Fire ants nest in almost any kind of locality and are extremely prolific. Even food cannot daunt the fire ant, for it has been reported in Brazil that when the water rises and washes out a colony, the ants form a ball, queen and brood in the middle, and this living ball floats away to a tree or to higher ground.

The tailor ant (Oecophylla smaragdina) and a few other ants (Polyrhodon) are unique among all the earth's creatures, so far as is known, in that they use their young as tools in nest construction.

Few adult insects spin silk, but the larvae of many have this ability to enclose themselves in silken cocoons, from which they will later emerge as fully formed adults. Oecophylla utilizes this accomplishment of its young in making its nests. Scientists have often torn one of the leaves that form its box-shaped nest and then watched the proceedings.

At first there is a wild scuffle on the part of the ants, all in fighting mood. They cannot agree, but they bite annoyingly. After they have given up trying to find and destroy the intruder, worker ants seize larvae in their mandibles and bring them to the damaged portions. Other workers seize the edges of the leaves and pull them together, while those with the larvae pass them back and forth, stimulating the grub to exude silk, which sticks and holds the pieces of the leaves together.

Live in the Tree Tops. In the Solomon Islands this pugnacious Oecophylla during those two weeks when an ant was not hitting him on the neck. He would instinctively reach up and seize the little creature, break its neck between his thumb and forefinger, and go on collecting.

But once, as he crushed one of them, he noticed that it was unusually hard. It was another ant, a Pedomyrma, rare and desirable. After that it was necessary for him to seize each attacking ant and carefully examine it before destroying it, so as not to crush a valuable specimen by mistake.

HOW ARE You TODAY

DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Talks About

Using Stored Up Fat

"NO ABNORMAL condition has occurred more frequently among our diabetic patients than has obesity (overweight)."

I am quoting Dr. Elliott P. Joslin, Boston, the outstanding authority on diabetes.

Life insurance companies are very strict in their consideration of permitting overweight to take out insurance, as they have found that so many of them later develop diabetes.

In fact they have found that in examining applicants for insurance as many as 20 per cent already are showing signs of the disease. The average diabetic man or woman has been greatly overweight. Overweight is due to overeating. What is added to the waist line is cut from the life line.

Dr. Charles H. Mayo says: "Men fifty years old and fifty pounds overweight are much more likely to have cancer than the normal. This means, then, that eating or overeating is a factor in causing cancer because half the cases of cancer are found in the stomach and intestines."

"To sum it up, the overweight have a higher death rate. At fifty years of age an excess weight of 50 pounds increases the death rate by 50 per cent." I am quoting from "How to Live" by Prof. Irving Fisher and Dr. Lyman Frank.

However, overweight has more than the death rate to consider; they must think of their everyday life—their chances for good health, their ability to get around easily, their resistance to ailments, their mental ability or grip.

Some Famed Light Eaters.

Famous men whose brains keep clear till the end are usually light eaters from early years of experience. They have found out just what agrees with them and are satisfied with this amount and variety of food. Chaucer, Depew attended dinners and banquets three or four times a week for years, but always looked over the menu and ate only the foods he knew gave him the nourishment he required.

Thos. A. Edison came of a long line of men who have learned to eat what they know their bodies required and no more. Thus in an interview some years ago Edison said: "The body is only a machine, and every practical man knows that to get good work out of a machine and keep it in repair at the same time one must know what the machine needs. Now, if you have a 100-horsepower engine and a boiler big enough to drive it, no wise engineer will fire that boiler to full capacity when he only wants to take eight horsepower out of his engine. If he does, he sooner or later burns the grate-iron off his fire-box. But that is just what the majority are doing; burning up 100 horsepower of fuel in their bodies and taking out eight horsepower of work."

Truth About the Stomach.

As you know, early man lived outdoors, used the skins of animals to cover his body, had a natural appetite and "filled" his stomach when he obtained food because he did not know just when he would get his next meal. Nature supplied him with a stomach that would hold enough food to fill his needs for a whole day or more.

Today we have these same huge muscles covering our bodies and have the same large stomach, but we do not live outdoors, do not work these huge muscles and do not need more than about half the food that was needed by early man. Yet because we have the same big stomach and get the kinds of food we like, many of us thoughtlessly think we have to fill this big stomach three times a day.

Remember, then, that we need some of all the best kinds of food daily, that is (a) meat, eggs or fish (b) cream, butter or other fat (c) vegetables, both starchy and leafy, (d) minerals and (e) water. But if we want to be at our best mentally and physically we eat just the amounts of these foods that will keep us strong without increasing our weight above normal.

Relaxation and Sleep.

So much has been written about the value of sleep that many nervous individuals worry themselves into sleeplessness. They fear dire ailments or even insanity if they don't get a certain number of hours of sleep each night.

Now while nothing can take the place of real sleep, with every muscle relaxed, it has been found that if an individual is unable to sleep he can relax body and mind to a point almost approaching sleep he can attain as high as 80 per cent of the value of sleep.

Gay Garden Prints Herald Spring

By CHERRIE NICHOLAS

GARDEN prints, as cool and colorful as an English countryside, will be worn by smart women for cruise and resort wear and early spring. Leading designers are turning out youthful costumes made of these refreshing prints in soft crepes with a supple draping quality that endears them to all. It is this type of frock that centers the stage at the present, for it is a light touch with midseason furs and coats.

Of course, if you are going or have gone south you will like the idea of a "jacket" ensemble styled after the manner of the models here pictured. Note that the silk to the left has a white background, which makes it admirable for southern resort wear. Then, too, these pure silk prints that pattern color against white have the "new" look which says at a glance that they are of this season's vintage. The tulip motif of the garden silk selected by the designer for the fashioning of this dress is in realistic coloring that make the theme of spring pulse through your entire system. An insert trim, in form of a hand-painted leaf motif, enhances the garden scene. The hat is of white tulle with grograin band trim.

The beauty of the other two-piece ensemble pictured is that the rich dark tone of its background lends it to immediate wear under the winter fur coats of those who are not trekking southward this season. This marguerite print tells you something interesting—that the daisy patternings are being featured in many of the new silks. Then, too, the message of grograin ribbon bindings is conveyed in the reverse. This use of grograin ribbon to finish edges is pronounced throughout the field of dress design for spring. A most welcome gesture it is, too, for it keys a color scheme to perfection in that the grograin ribbon repeats, thereby emphasizing a dominant color-tone of the print. That is, if you want your costume to look navy or brown or green or deep red, assuming to the skirt. The all-around pleated skirt is on the program, but for practical about-town wear the narrow alouette with a subtle unobtrusive or shirred device, just enough to permit freedom of action is first choice.

IDEAL SPORT HAT

Here is one of the newer sports hats. Mary Carlisle, known in film stardom, wears this new spring hat with her smart checked tailored suit. Here you get a "perfect picture" of what is to be this spring. Indeed, suits are front page news, especially the man-tailored suit with brief jackets neatly buttoned and plentiful pockets. The hat is of spunter felt with a loose zig-zag yarn stitch in rows forming a pleasing contrast as well as being highly decorative.

PEACE BIRTHRIGHT OF CHILD; BANISH FEAR FROM MIND

Fear, one of man's greatest enemies and the root of much evil overwhelming the adult, acquires all too hardy a growth in childhood. Yet readers of the current issue of the Parents' Magazine are reminded by Psychologist Rhoda Bameister that if fear had no survival value, it would not have persisted to the degree it has; that a little fear is an excellent thing to keep humns out of danger. It is caution and foresight, the habit of going slowly and thinking when in doubt that father and mother should spare no effort to develop in their offspring.

Fears come and go. Mrs. Bameister admits it is easier to know what to do for a timid child than to understand where the fears come from in the first place, but says it is important to find out. Her analysis identifies several varieties of fears.

Baby cries at the sight of a floating duck in his tub. Why? Because once he lost his balance in the bath while watching ducky. Three-year-old Bobby runs from a salamander. "Shame on Bobby," cried mother, forgetting the fact she makes when a child's crawling comes towards her. Here's a fear that comes from contagion. Small Susie's afraid to go to bed in the dark. The chances are this is a direct suggestion from induced, perhaps, by mother who cautions Susie against doing so and so lest "the boogey man" catch her. Just, Bameister remarks: "It is both cruel and stupid to warp a child's character by making fear the emotion that controls him; it is a repressive and inefficient control at best."

In order to help the child get rid of unreasonable fears, the psychologist suggests replacing the old association with a new and pleasant one and sound effects used to give the impression of intense, usually terrifying emotion. Says Mrs. Bameister, mingling no words: "This impression the youngsters get only too well. The entire

We learn from the lady who knows that among the more immediate and less abstract reasons for a child's anxiety attitudes and nervous tension the most harmful is "the thrill-mongering" children's radio program in which voices are keyed up and sound effects used to give the impression of intense, usually terrifying emotion. Says Mrs. Bameister, mingling no words:

"This impression the youngsters get only too well. The entire

Twine will tie the bundles much tighter and will not slip when knots are made if it is dampened before using.

If fruit cake becomes very hard it can be wrapped in a cloth saturated with orange or apple peach juice and stored in an airtight box.

Place a hot water bottle in the clothes basket when hanging out and taking in clothes in cold weather. It will keep the hands warm.

Never set cut flowers in a draft. If you do you will find they will soon wilt.

When maple syrup becomes cloudy it is the fire or ant that boils, then take it off the fire and let cool.

If woolen stockings shrink while washing, put them through the water again and while still wet put them on a stockinette stretcher.

IMPORTANT SUGGESTIONS FOR SHEEP PRODUCERS

According to the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, proper feeding and watering of ewes, especially near lambing time, pays big dividends. A grain mixture recommended by the Experiment Station consists of equal parts corn, bran and oats, with linseed oil meal in the proportion of 1 to 7. With the supply of water in many cases from up, it is doubly important that water be provided the ewes. The addition of linseed oil meal to the grain mixture serves as a laxative for the ewe, as well as other beneficial effects.

Leaves of plants owe their color to a substance known as chlorophyll; this is somewhat similar to wax. As light is essential to the evolution of chlorophyll, when plants are brought up in the dark they cannot form this wax, with the result that they are "bleached," or white.

SLEEVES "SAY IT" BY CHERIE NICHOLAS

Fusion turns the spotlight on sleeves this season. It is considered the latest in dress, to contrast the dress and to be that elaborate and decorative they tone the entire costume. The model pictured is an Alis creation. It is of handsome black velvet and stresses extreme simplicity in its styling. The vanguard sleeves are in striking contrast according to the latest dictate of fashion. They are of sumptuous gold and velvet lane in a Renaissance design. The shoes are quite the newest. They are of gold cloth and are heelless.

Cotton Most Widely Used
The most widely used textile material is cotton, as 50 per cent of all the clothing worn throughout the world is made of cotton materials. Its universal demand is further exemplified by the fact that only five pounds of silk and 200 pounds of wool are used for every 1,000 pounds of cotton—Collier's Weekly.

Fresh Water in Jamaica
Unlike some of the islands in other parts of the West Indies, Jamaica is plentifully supplied with fresh water. The Spanish term from which the name Jamaica is derived means "Island of Springs," and fresh water springs abound throughout the island.

Prague's Features

The outstanding feature of Prague, capital of the republic, is its great castle and cathedral which rise on a steep hill and dominate the city. The castle is now the White House of Czechoslovakia and most of the government offices are in it. An idea of its size can be gained from the fact that it has about 700 rooms.

It was absorbed by the Know-Nothing party, but revived during the Civil war as the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America. It is a beneficial organization composed of native American males, sixteen years or over. BEARCATS 29; BRAVES 27

The Walton Bearcats went to Corinth, last Friday night, and lost, tied and won a game. Here's how it happened. When the game was over, the score was 27 to 25 in favor of Corinth; according to the scores and in their dressing room, afterwards, some of the Walton boys remembered Corinth had scored 9 baskets in the final minutes of the game, but this was not an article and they immediately held conference with the coaches, referee and scorers, and decided the game was a tie at 25-25. Then it was decided to play off the tie, and in the next 3 minutes, Walton scored 4 points and Corinth 2, to make the Bearcats the winners 29 to 27. Osborne was high scorer for the Cats with 8 points. Led by McClure, with 10 points, the Walton Cubs won a 21 to 25 victory from the Corinth second team.

FALMOUTH 48; WALTON 33

Warsaw Man Takes His Life

James Gayner Cuts His Throat In Fit of Despondency

On Tuesday last week, James Gayner, age about 70, a retired farmer, living in Warsaw, Ky., cut his throat at his home with a razor. Dr. J. M. Shupert attended the wounded man and it required 27 stitches to close the wound. However, he had lost considerable blood and was in a very weakened condition. He lingered until 11:30 Thursday morning, when he died from the effects of the wound. His wife died Jan. 10th, just seven days previous to his death, and it is presumed her loss was the cause of his rash act. He is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Mary Flora of Warsaw, and Mrs. Margaret Suler of Worthville, Ky.

James Gayner was born in Ireland and came to this country with his parents when quite a child. He came to Warsaw when a young man and in 1888, married Mrs. Marion Grubbs. Mr. Gayner was a devout member of the Catholic church, and his funeral took place from the Warsaw church, Saturday morning. Rev. Conley officiating, after which the remains were buried in the church cemetery.

Baptist Church Parsonage Burns

Friday Night and Furnishings Are Badly Damaged

Friday night about 12:20, the alarm of fire was sounded by someone who discovered the Baptist parsonage on fire when smoke was issuing from the building. Rev. T. L. Wooden and son Tommie were in Louisville, Ky., at the time and Mrs. Wooden was spending the night with Mr. and Mrs. Ed Hankinson near by. The Walton-Vernon Fire Department arrived promptly and in a short time had the flames subdued. The cause of the fire is unknown. Rev. Wooden said the house was filled with rats, as big as cats and some of them are so old they have worn off their tails, and may have in some manner caused the fire. An inspection of the fire showed no defects according to D. K. Johnson who stated that it was fortunate that his wife was not in the house at the time, as it is a sound sleeper, and might have been overcome by the smoke. The building was gutted and the furniture mostly ruined by fire and water. The parsonage is an old building and no doubt will have to be rebuilt. Both building and furnishings were insured. The loss will be in the neighborhood of $2,000. Edwards Insurance Agency carried the insurance on the furniture.

Senator Borah Throws His Hat in the Republican Ring—Administration's Revamped Farm Bill Introduced—Farley Assails Liberty League.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WILLIAM E. BORAH, the liberal Republican senator from Idaho, is now a full-fledged candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination. He formally put himself in the running by announcing that he would enter the primaries in Ohio to be held May 12. That state requires that the candidate shall declare himself in writing, and this Mr. Borah said he would do.

The senator's statement follows: "After a thorough survey of the Ohio situation I am convinced that the people of that state should be given an opportunity to express their choice in the Presidential primary on May 12. Under the so-called 'favorite son' plan this privilege is denied them.

"To obtain an expression of popular will it is my intention to place at least eight candidates or delegates at large in the field.

"I shall make a number of speeches in Ohio and present the issues as I see them."

It is understood by his friends that the senator will make a contest for delegates in almost every state having a preference primary. He says the G. O. P. conventions have been dominated by the old conservative leaders through the operation of the "favorite son" scheme and this control he desires to destroy if possible. It is his opinion that only a liberal Republican can defeat President Roosevelt next fall, and few will deny that he is the outstanding liberal in his party.

CONFORMING to the request of the President, both senate and house passed measures regarding the cotton, tobacco and potato control acts. In the house also radical and John J. O'Connor of New York voted "no" a protest against the Supreme court's ruling that the act of New York had delivered a violent attack on that tribunal.

Following this action, the senate agriculture committee reported and introduced the administration's substitute farm bill. The revamped measure provides that the federal government would make grants to the states just as it does for the roads act. The states in turn would designate some agency, to be approved by the secretary of agriculture, to distribute the money to individual farmers. The money would be distributed on a formula taking into consideration:

Acres of crops.
Acres of soil improving or erosion preventing crops.
Changes in farming practices.
Percentage of the normal production of any one or more agricultural commodities designated by the secretary of agriculture, which exceeds the percentage of the normal national production of the commodity.

EVERY Presidential possibility these days must have some plan for the salvation of the American farmer. Senator L. J. Dickinson of Iowa, also mentioned for the Republican nomination, now brings out his permanent farm program which he says would divorce the farm problem from "bureaucratic control" in Washington. His plan would embrace erosion control, soil conservation, and restoration of fertility of lands. Administration would be handled jointly by the states and the federal government in a manner similar to highway construction.

The Dickinson program, similar to that advocated by former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, includes payment of the balance due farmers of AAA contracts, a higher tariff on farm products, continued corn loans, and extension of farm mortgage at a low rate of interest.

IN HIS press conference President Roosevelt announced that a billion dollars' worth of lending authorized by acts of congress would not be carried out. For example, the Home Owners' Loan corporation has passed on nearly all proposed loans and will not need beyond $500 million and a billion dollars, the President declared. Applications for HOLC loans closed last June 27. Outstanding loans of the agency amount to near 2 billion 900 million dollars.

HEADS of various government agencies concerned with housing have submitted to the President a nationwide low cost program based on cheap federal loans to local communities. According to authoritative sources, this undertaking would contemplate:

1. A long-range building program.
2. Interest rates perhaps as low as 1 per cent on federal loans.
3. Construction of facilities for as many as one million families.

Full control of management and condemnation proceedings would be lodged with local officials under the plan, the aim being to decentralize activities from Washington.

SENATOR VANDENBERG of Michigan has grave doubts of the economic necessity or value of the ship canal being dug across central Florida, and offered in the senate commerce committee a resolution for investigation by a special committee. In support of his move he produced letters from 11 companies operating steamships saying they would not use the canal even if no tolls were charged. They asserted the expense of employing canal pilots added to the risk of damage to ships and offset saving in navigation costs.

Work was started some time ago on the canal, which, if completed, would be between $140,000,000 and $200,000,000.

TWO attacks on the American Liberty league were made in one day. The first was by Postmaster General Farley who spoke at a Roosevelt dinner in Miami, Fla.

"The Liberty league," said Farley, "would rule America. It would squeeze the worker dry in his old age and cast him like an orange rind into the refuse pail. It would continue the infamous policy of using the agencies of government to create a plutocracy that would perpetuate the sorry business of the Mellons and the Morgans in reducing the masses to the status of serfs at the mercy of the exploiters at the top."

"The American Liberty league," said Farley, "is a conspiracy for the reactionaries and the plutocrats. Hoover, the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Manufacturers' association."

Farley's program is frankly plutocratic and asks for the rule of money over men, as during the 12 years before Roosevelt's administration. "It demands that workers and farmers be put in their places and made to understand that they are mere hewers of wood and carriers of water."

"This idea of the 'American way' is to maintain a system under which all the wealth of the nation was being concentrated in the hands of a very few—5 per cent of the people."

At their convention in Washington the United Mine Workers also took a crack at the Liberty league, adopting a resolution denouncing the organization as "inimical to the interests and people of the United States."

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, former British Prime minister who, together with President Wilson, and Clemenceau, was largely responsible for the remaking of the map of the world after the war, now admits that work was not wisely done. Rising in parliament to support a resolution by Mr. Laborite, urging Britain to call a world conference to deal with the causes of war, Lloyd George said: "I do not believe there will be peace in the world until you consider the colonial mandates granted at the conclusion of the World war, when Germany's colonies were split up. Belgium got the best part of German East Africa and the whole of the Congo. Portugal and Holland each got millions of square miles. These countries have no right to the colonies. On the other hand, Germany has Germany with none, Italy with practically none."

The house of commons rejected the proposal, however, passing instead, an amendment expressing confidence that the national conference is taking all practical steps possible for the promotion of international prosperity and a better understanding among all peoples.

UNITED Mine Workers of America, in convention in Washington, shouted boisterous defiance at William Green's plan that they drop their campaign for industrial organization.

The A. F. of L. president opened his speech before the 1700 delegates from the coal pits with a plea for co-operation to prevent a split in the ranks of American labor. The A. F. of L., which has 1,000,000 (or skilled worker) unions, had ordered the miners, led by John L. Lewis, to abandon their committee that is working for industrial unions. But as he warmed up to his subject, Mr. Green clashed more directly with the views of the miners and the scattered applause which had greeted his remarks changed to boos and shouts of opposition.

When Lewis arose to reply to Green he was given the support of almost every delegate in the hall.

FIVE of the members of the new federal reserve board were inducted into office with due ceremony. A sixth, Ralph W. Morrison of Texas, was to arrive later and be sworn in in T. A. R. seventh member had not yet been named by President Roosevelt.

Marshall S. Egan, an appointed chairman, and M. S. Szymczak of Chicago, were held over. The other four, besides Morrison, are Ronald Ransom, Atlanta banker; John McKee of Ohio, former chief bank examiner for the Reconstruction Finance corporation, and Joseph A. Broderick of New York.

The reserve board, which has been called a supreme court of banking, has power to regulate all American financial history. Among these is authority to double present margins that member banks are required to maintain against deposits; the dominant voice on the open market committee—which charts the system's participation in the government bond market, and over which it has no power to order the former law; power to veto over the heads of the various reserve banks which insures the selection of a president who will cooperate with the board.

JOSEPH R. EASTMAN, co-director of transportation, is trying to get out of an estimated annual waste of $500,000 in railroad terminal operations, and announced that he would ask the nation's railroads to cut the cost of terminal facilities in eleven cities. This, he figures, would save $500,000 annually. Mr. Eastman had tried unsuccessfully to get the carriers to make the changes voluntarily.

The unifications will be ordered at Worcester, Mass., Mechanville, N. Y., Grand Rapids, Mich., Jacksonville, Fla.; Montgomery, Ala.; Meridian, Miss.; Freeport, Ill.; Des Moines, Iowa; and Ogden, Utah.

After the first group of carriers, Eastman said that, if necessary, he was prepared to compel "other steps of increasing magnitude," but would stand aside for a while to let the carriers produce their own momentum.

Unless extended by congress, Eastman's office will expire in June. He has recommended that it be continued at least five years.

WILHELM GUSTLOFF, Nazi leader in Switzerland, was assassinated in Davos by David Frankfurter, son of a rabbi and a native of Yugoslavia, who told the police he acted on no one's orders and was not connected with any political group. The German government immediately sent to Switzerland a strong protest, stressing that Berlin had often warned the Swiss government of the "dangers of anti-Nazi agitation by the liberal and Marxist press." The net result of the murder is likely to be bad for the Jews, for they may find that Switzerland will not be the hospitable haven for refugees that it has been in the past.

To reduce the danger of clashes between Jews and militant Nazis, Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, German minister of propaganda, prohibited all meetings of Jewish cultural associations until further notice.

ON ORDERS from Gov. Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey, further investigation of the Lindbergh kidnapping and murder case has been started. Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, head of the state police, assigned two of his best men to the inquiry, and he enlisted the aid of federal investigating agencies and the New York police.

The governor wants the investigation to be painstaking and thorough. The reprieve which he granted Hauptmann will expire on September 15. After that date at least four weeks, and perhaps more, will elapse before the date for the execution will be ordered by Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, who presided over the trial.

Divide and Rule.
Big Men, Light Eyes
Why Go Naked?
Borrowing a Blimp

Mr. Green, American Federation of Labor head, warns the miners' not to split up the federation. Mr. Lewis, leader of the miners, tells Mr. Green, in substance, "you mind your own business." A labor split seems "not."

Union labor should consider the fable of the dying peasant who summoned his sons and showed them how they could break small sticks separately, but could not break them when all are tied together.

Louis XI's motto, Divide et impera ("Divide and rule"), in dealing with powerful nobles, is not unknown to the enemies of union labor, or Goethe's.

Divide and rule! Powerful word. Unite and lead! Better word.

A lonely English soldier living on an island in the Indian ocean wrote that he wanted a wife, saying, "I have hazel eyes," nothing else about himself. Already 250 English girls have offered to marry him. The ship disappointed him and comfort in a better marriage, picking out somebody with blue eyes. It is anyone's money, but it must be said that practically all the great men in history had blue or gray eyes, even men from dark-eyed races, like Napoleon from Corsica, Caesar from Rome.

To save answering questions, here is a short list: Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Roosevelt, Edison, Henry Ford. Look up the others.

Near Tampa, Fla., a schooner loaded with men, women and children on the way to establish a nudist colony in the Virgin Islands, ran aground. Navigators were unwilling to sign for a nudist enterprise, afraid of the consequences of nudism. The human race began that way in the Garden of Eden, and each of its starts out as a nudist at birth. The struggle is to keep clothed thereafter.

It is a strange demoralization that makes some long to run about undressed; the more strange because they look so hideously ugly.

Washington—If ever there were a time other than when the nation was at war with money, money dominated the situation at Washington. It assuredly is now. One can go to more than 100 government departments, to the White House or to Capitol Hill and the subject of discussion is or soon will be money.

A year or so ago, we heard a great deal about money. We heard of it in connection with an appropriation of $800,000,000, the greatest single piece-time voting of money in our history. And, likewise, we heard money discussed when the President used his power to devalue the dollar in its relation to gold.

Now, however, the subject of money is discussed in a slightly different vein. The question that is asked is how can the government get the money it needs. In other words, we are now getting to the question of taxation, and it is a question that neither the President nor his lieutenants in congress like to face. It is an election year and a tax increase in election year is not what the politicians would call smoothing the highway of a campaign.

Passage of the legislation providing immediate payment of the veterans' bonus brought conditions to a head. The President vetoed the bonus bill and congress promptly overrode that veto. So the President promptly told congress that something had to be done about it; that the only funds the treasury could tap would be by borrowing, and that since congress had yielded to the vocal minority represented by the greatest lobby ever to populate the Capitol, it thereby invited for itself a problem of raising the money.

Of course, the President must assume some responsibility even though he vetoed the bonus for the reason that some of the funds which must be raised will go to pay the control benefits or bonus resulting from invalidation of the processing taxes and the Agricultural Adjustment act. The President, by his veto, is putting the blame in congress, want to continue that payment and they also want to pay farmers on commitments previously made by congress.

There was in this situation a development to which I believe attention should be called. Through the years, congress has been an easy spender. Through the same years it has avoided at every turn laying taxes to offset the money it was spending. Under the Roosevelt administration the peak of easy spending has been reached and congress has gone along with a volitional "aye" on every spending proposition sent to the Capitol from the White House. The congressional attitude to which I have referred came up in bulk at the time of the bonus vote. Every time a bonus opponent inquired where the government would get the money to pay the two and one-half billion to the veterans, the answer from the bonus supporters was, in effect, "It's up to Henry."

I can recall a familiar slogan, current when I was a boy, that was used always when some one desired back on their heels—to push the buck. It was "let George do it." In the bonus controversy, Senator Bankhead, Democrat of Alabama, was the first member of congress to hear "it's up to Henry."

He meant that the job of raising the money belonged to Henry Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury. Senator Bankhead spoke over the speaker's rostrum to the made the statement. He put into a thought which permeated the minds of a vast majority of unthinking representatives and senators.

Perhaps I should not say anything because those men were, in truth, thinking very deeply. Their thoughts, instead of turning to the speaker, were turning to votes in November. That was the reason for passage of the bonus. Senators and representatives seeking re-election were afraid to go into the battle for nomination and reelection this summer and have war veterans drag out the skeleton of a vote in opposition to immediate payment of the bonus.

It will be a long time before those who voted for the bonus can live it down. A keen political maneuver has something in it that calls for a long time to be forgotten. A political maneuver such as was the passage of the bonus did not give any reason for commending or except, perhaps, the justification that if the Roosevelt administration was committed to passing out hundreds of millions of dollars on bond-oddings and other more or less useless projects, then the war veterans were entitled to be paid now the sums which congress promised them would be paid in 1947. That really is a powerful argument. But if Roosevelt supporters make that argument they are at the same time damning the New Deal spending policies, so I fancy that such an argument will be rarely advanced.

It is entirely probable that there will be no tax bill this year unless the President's letter to Speaker Bryan pointing out the necessity for raising revenue causes an unheard of number of senators and representatives to do a flip-flop. No imagination is required to see that a representative or senator in a tough spot when he goes back home asking the suffrage of his constituents and must tell them at the same time that he will be asked to tax them which they must pay.

Well, if that be true, how is "Henry" going to get the money? It will have to be borrowed and it will have to be borrowed on government bonds which add up into an increasing government deficit. It means that instead of a deficit of around three billions in the next fiscal year, the treasury will be confronted with a deficit of more than five billions and the public debt, in the meantime, will have been correspondingly increased. It means, in addition, that the banks of the country will have to pile more government bonds on top of the government bonds they have thus far absorbed in financing a policy of spending our way out of the depression.

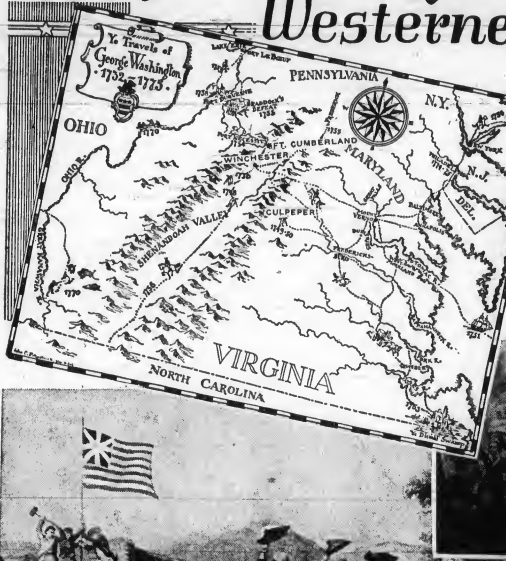

The tragedy of the situation in congress that brought about Senator Bankhead's remark of "It's up to Henry" has been looking upon the treasury as a source of revenue. It is not and it never has been. Government is non-productive. It can't produce anything. It can't produce anything by the name of borrowing, by making them away from the people or by borrowing and if it borrows it has to pay back.

The newspapers throughout the country have been full of reports concerning the "It's up to Henry" campaign. The A. I. Smith speech, coming from the man who made it, brought about a sudden expansion in the political fire. It really opened up the fight and henceforth we are due to be surprised with this claim or that, this charge and that denial or counter-charge, as the various leaders marshal their forces.

Thus far, in addition to President Roosevelt's Jackson day speech to the $20-a-plate dinner and Mr. Smith's Liberty league dinner outburst, we have had active campaigning by former President Hoover, Governor Falmagne of Georgia, by Senator Borah, the Idaho Republican; by Governor Landon, the Kansas Republican, and by Senator Bunker of Arkansas, the Democratic leader in the senate, who spoke in reply to Mr. Smith. Others are in the offing for the Republican and Democratic national committees are engaging radio time for the purpose.

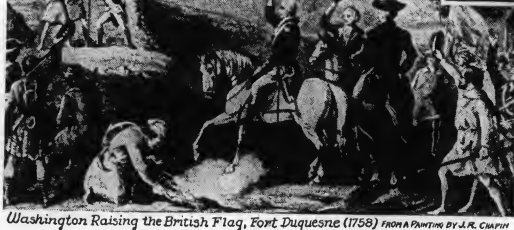

As speeches and statements increase in number, and as fanfare grows louder, I find myself getting a bit callous to them all. I have been wondering whether the American people have lost their sense of humor completely, because the situation really has a humorous side. Unless the people's sense of humor has been dreadfully seared, it seems to me they ought to be highly amused over ridiculous statements now being made on one side of the fence or on the other. Take, for instance, the handwritten bonus vote message. It presented something a bit unusual because in my time in Washington it happened only once before that a President wrote a bill with a handwritten message to congress. Of course, it was intended to be dramatic—and it was. But the point is, a year when congress passed the bonus, the President made a personal appearance in the halls of congress and read his own vote message. He made his vigorous fight and he called his supporters in line to sustain his veto. That has been so much talk that Washington since the handwritten message went to congress that the President wrote a bill with a handwritten message to congress. George Washington, Westerner

Washington at Braddock's Defeat

Washington Raising the British Flag, Fort Duquesne (1758) FROM A PAINTING BY J.R. COOPER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF you saw the title of this article did you find yourself saying: "George Washington a Westerner? Why, I thought he was born in Virginia, lived most of his life there and died there. And Virginia certainly is an Eastern state."

You're quite right, for he was and it is! But the point is—and it's one which few Americans, perhaps, realize—that some of the most important events in Washington's career took place in the West, that he was one of the most "Western-minded" men of his day and that he retained his interest in the West to the end of his life.

Washington's first experience in "the West" came when he was sixteen years old. In 1748 Lord Fairfax engaged the young Virginian to aid George W. Fairfax, his agent, in making surveys in the Shenandoah Valley beyond the Blue Ridge mountains. This trip lasted a month and brought him for the first time into contact with the red men who were to resist so savagely the westward push of the white men.

Five years later Washington set out upon another journey farther west which was more fraught with danger and much more important historically. The Ohio company, formed in 1748 by a London merchant and several prominent men in Virginia, had obtained a grant of 200,000 acres on the Ohio river. But when the company attempted to make good its claim to these lands, the French, who were determined to dominate the interior of North America, broke up their trading posts and carried their traders away to Canada as prisoners. Moreover, Marquis Duquesne, the new governor-general of Canada, ordered forts built in the Ohio country to hold it for the French. By 1753 they had established posts at Presque Isle (the present Erie, Pa.) and Le Boeuf (near Waterford, Pa.) and an outpost at Venango (at the junction of French creek and the Allegheny).

Late in the year Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia sent Washington to warn the French off of the lands claimed by the English. Washington engaged Christopher Gist, who had surveyed the Ohio company's lands in 1750, as his guide and four others as "servitors." Later they were joined by a party of friendly Indians who accompanied them to Venango.

The expedition, made in the dead of winter, was a perilous as well as a futile one. Both the French commanders at Venango and Le Boeuf were firm in their refusal to quit their posts until ordered to do so by the governor of Canada. So Washington started back to report to Dinwiddie.

During this trip Washington visited for the first time "the Forks of the Ohio" and recorded in his journal: "I spent some time in viewing the Rivers, and the Land in the Fork; which I think extremely well situated for a Fort." Washington could not have realized at the time how important to his future career this spot was to be. For within a year Captain Trent with a party of backwoodsmen was building a fort at this "extremely well situated" place and Washington, as a lieutenant-colonel of Virginia militia, was marching with it against the French (now away from Venango, driven Trent's men away and were themselves building Fort Duquesne there).

Washington pushed on and a party of French under Jumonville came out from Duquesne "to meet" the English. On May 28, 1754, in what is now Fayette county, Pennsylvania, "the two tiny forces met; the volleys they exchanged opened the war that was to be waged until 1763, on the battle fields of Europe, the plains of India, and around the islands of the sea, as well as in the woods of the New World."

Thus George Washington's first fight on the frontier made him an international figure. For Jumonville was killed in the encounter ("assassinated," the French declared), and after that the great conflict was inevitable. Washington fell back to the Great Meadows where he built a crude breastwork which he named Fort Necessity. There he was attacked by Colonel de Villiers, Jumonville's brother, and all day long his troops "weary, half-starved, doled to the skin by the constant rain, and depleted by the musketry fire from the heights which commanded them, fought off their assailants." That night Washington was forced to capitulate.

A year later Washington again rode West, this time as an aide to Gen. Edward Braddock's fine British army which was certain to capture Fort Duquesne from the French. Then came the fatal July 9 on the Monongahela and a few days later Washington was writing to his brother, Augustine: "By the all powerful dispensations of Providence, I have been protected beyond human probability and expectation; for I had four bullets through my coat, and two horses shot under me, yet escaped unhurt, although death was leveling my companions on every side of me."

The next two years found Washington, now a colonel and commander-in-chief of all the militia in Virginia, guarding her frontier against the Indians who, encouraged by Braddock's defeat, repeatedly attacked the outlying settlements.

Washington's Mission to the Ohio
FROM THE PAINTING BY A. CHAPPEL

Most of this time was spent at Fort Cumberland and Fort Loudoun (Winchester) with occasional trips to Williamsburg, to Alexandria and to Mount Vernon and longer journeys to Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

But at last in the fall of 1758 he set out for the West again. This time he was in command of Virginia troops accompanying the expedition of Gen. John Forbes against Fort Duquesne and on November 28 he wrote to Governor Fauquier:

"Fort Duquesne, or the ground rather on which it stood, was possessed by his majesty's troops on the 28th instant."

Victory, at last! So the career of George Washington as a frontier fighter ended. In January, 1760, he married the Widow Custis and prepared to settle down at Mount Vernon as a Virginia gentleman farmer. But his experience during the French and Indian war had given him an intimate knowledge of the land across the mountains and he realized fully its future importance and the opportunities which it would afford for a land speculator.

Constructive Suggestions or Complaints: Which Get Results?

There are two ways of accomplishing things which one has to get done. One is to complain that things are not as they should be. The other is to make constructive suggestions and request that they be followed out. The first method is apt to annoy the person conferred with. The second appeals to his sense of justice, and, if the suggestion is in good faith and within reason, it is generally heeded. Assuming that in both cases the thing gets done, in the first instance, annoyance prevails, while in the second, good will is fostered. You will remember the old adage that you can catch more flies with molasses, than vinegar. In other words you can get more accomplished by keeping good tempered and sweet, than by getting annoyed and sour tempered.

Getting Things Accomplished. It is well to remember these methods for family use, and for civic purposes. It does not mean that one can get things done merely by being good natured. There must be a plus to it. There must be continual effort in the right direction until the thing is won. And when there has been no hard feeling created, and the matter is seen to, there is likely to be a feeling of satisfaction on the side of both parties, each being pleased that a good thing has resulted.

It was by the recommended method that a woman succeeded in getting a bench on a waiting station platform. She appealed to the correct authorities, telling of the genuine need for such a bench, as tired persons found it almost more than they could endure to stand from ten to twenty minutes, more or less, according to the connection of one car with another at this junction. At first, came a note stating that her request had been noted, and formally thanking her for letting them know of her wish; nothing more, and nothing was done.

It was only after repeated appeals, and continued assurances that the company would be treating their patrons with consideration by putting the bench at the place suggested, that finally she succeeded. And now, not only are less one trip to the city made less tiresome, but hundreds of other persons daily find the seat a blessing.

Another instance comes to mind. Repeated accidents of major and minor severity occurred at a certain city corner, by autos colliding. A woman requested the city to install STOP BEFORE CROSSING signs by the curb at each corner of the cross street. Since her request was heeded, fewer catastrophes have occurred, and there need be none. If only motorists would heed them, the only complaint, but she made a good suggestion in a good way, and won her point to the comfort of all but the reckless.

Length of February

When January and February are added to the calendar by Nona Poppitts in 1771 B. C., February was given 29 days. This was continued by Julius Caesar in his revision of 48 B. C., but on every day was added every fourth year and as this was placed in February, in those leap years February had 30 days. When Augustus Caesar changed the name of the month to Augustus, he took one day from February, so that August should have 31 days like July. Since then the present length of February has prevailed.

Dust, Spray Halts Bean Leaf Hopper

Copper Compound Found Good Protection If Applied Early.

By L. H. Shoupine, Assistant Entomologist, Illinois State Natural History Survey—WNU Service.

It is too early in the season to determine whether bean leaf hoppers will be plentiful enough to cause serious damage to the bean crop this year. However, the hoppers frequently reduce the crop by 50 per cent, and adequate preparations for fighting or spraying the beans with a copper compound will be good crop insurance.

Infested beans yielded 50 per cent less than those that had been sprayed or dusted in tests conducted at the Cook county branch experiment station of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

A copper dust containing tobacco and gypsum is one of the dusts and sprays that has proved effective in controlling the leaf hoppers during the tests. It was applied at the rate of about 25 to 25 pounds to the acre. Applications were made five times, beginning as soon as the plants were up and before the ground and continuing until five applications were made.

The 3-5-5 Bordeaux spray also proved effective, but was not quite as good as the copper dust. Nicotine and phos spray had little value in controlling leaf hoppers.

Bean leaf hoppers do not hibernate in the winter, but migrate to the south in the fall. They constitute one of the worst enemies of beans and frequently infest gardens in heavy numbers.

Cut Grass Hay Early Is Recommended by Expert

The leading slogan about grass hay is to "cut early." Disregard the "first bloom" and "second bloom" of timothy, and cut as soon as the heads and completely out. . . . Hay cut early will contain 8 per cent more protein, and is much more palatable to the dairy cow. It is cow hay. If the meadows were fertilized this spring with nitrogenous fertilizer, there will be an even higher percentage of protein in the hay (as protein is made from nitrogen) and, of course, a higher yield. . . . Cut your hay early and get two crops of quality hay.

This is a statement made by Prof. L. A. Keegan of the Rhode Island experiment station. It may be said that several experiment stations have been paying more attention to making good hay from timothy and other grasses and invariably reports are to the effect that thorough fertilization and early cutting, a hay is produced which is much superior to that grown on meadows not rich in nitrogen and cut late—Howard's Dairyman.

Feed for Work Horses

One of the poorest bits of economy on the farm is to try to save on the feed of work horses, says a writer in Pathfinder Magazine. It is a common error as feed supplies get low to increase the quantity of roughage and lessen the amount of concentrated feed. An idle horse can eat enough roughage to supply its needs for protein, vitamins, and minerals, but a working horse cannot. If deprived of an adequate amount of concentrated feeds the work horse begins to draw on the body fat for energy needed, and when that is exhausted it begins to draw on the muscles with the result that efficiency is constantly decreased. If this condition continues a complete breakdown is inevitable. The work horse should be fed chiefly on grains and other easily digested concentrated feeds with only enough roughage to keep the digestive tract in good order.

The outstanding feature of Prague capital of the republic is its great castle and cathedral, which rise on a steep hill and dominate the city. The castle is now the White House of Czechoslovakia and most of the government offices are in it. An idea of its size can be gained from the fact that it has about 700 rooms.

A NOTE OF APPRECIATION

February 10, 1936

Mr. E. G. Stephenson, Gen. Mgr.,
Consolidated Telephone Co.,
Covington, Kentucky.

Dear Sir:

I want to take this opportunity to thank your company and to particularly commend your night operator, Miss Mamie Hays, for the service given last week when my house burned. Also I want to thank all of my neighbors for their prompt response and splendid help.

When the fire was discovered I called the operator and she immediately phoned several of my neighbors who quickly responded and succeeded in removing practically all the furniture before the house was destroyed. Had it not been for the telephone I would doubtless have lost everything.

I have moved into another house near Bullsville, and, of course, wish to have a phone installed immediately, as, after my recent experience, I do not wish to be without the safety and convenience that the telephone affords.

Again expressing my appreciation, I am

Yours truly,

Burlington, R. R.

Mr. Mamie Stephens.

The above letter illustrates one of the many reasons why a telephone in YOUR HOME is a real necessity.

Mrs. Stephens now has another phone installed at her new home—the number, Burlington 219, remains the same.

WITH FUR CAPE

BY CHERIE NICHOLS

The smartest ensembles this season are fifty-fifty wool fabric and fur. That is, the dress is of wool in a warm winter color, red, blue, green or perhaps gray plaid, with jacket, coat or cape of fur, with emphasis on the cape, for capes are having a tremendous vogue. To carry the ensemble idea out, fashion decrees that the fur cape or coat, as the case may be, must be belted with the same woolen that makes the dress. The ensemble picture is a striking exponent of the wondrous fur-plus-wool move. The cape is of nutria fur, has the smart new drop shoulder yoke, small square collar and high closing, is lined with a soft rabbit woolen weave. The skirt, gilet and scarf of this same woolen completes this dashing costume. The reason that rabbit wool weaves are especially favored for this type of costume is that they are soft and caressing to the touch, light-weight yet delightfully warm and wearable.

Uncle Eli Fodger of Coon Center, recently paid the Pathfinder editorial office one of his rare visits. Uncle Eli is getting along in years now and he does have a lot to say about that inquisitive little great-granddaughter of his. In explaining that she is too bright for his aging old head to keep ahead of her let slip this story. One evening the little girl had been beseeching him with an endless succession of questions, all of which he tried to answer. And then just before the little miss went off to bed he asked, "Granddaddy Eli, were you in the ark?"

"Why, no," Uncle Eli explained smilingly.

"Then," she asked, regarding him with innocent wonder, "why weren't you drowned?"—Pathfinder.

New Tobacco Bill Proposed

By Congressman Virgil Chapman

For Regulation of Burley Crop

Congressman Virgil Chapman of the Sixth Kentucky Congressional District, has introduced in Congress a bill to authorize states in the Burley tobacco belt to enter into a compact for the regulation of tobacco production. He states that it will enable burley growers to secure adequate bursary similar to those enjoyed under the AAA program.

It is desired to substitute various tobacco regulations laid down by the AAA plan and he believes it will effect a substantial reduction in burley growing based on retreating acreage cultivation. Soil conservation and prevention of erosion are featured in the bill.

ALL-DAY MEETING; SOIL AND CROPS

Leading Research Men To Speak At Crop Meeting

George Roberts, head of the Soil Department, and E. J. Kinney, head of the Crops Department of the Kentucky State Experiment Station will speak at the Soil and Crops Meeting to be held at Burlington, Friday, Feb. 28th, according to H. R. Finkler, County Agent.

Both of these men are recognized nationally as authorities in their respective fields, and are in constant touch with the farmers' meetings throughout the state. "Boone County is fortunate," said Mr. Finkler, "in having these men who will research men to address our coming meeting."

The farmers of this county, along with those of the entire county, are awakening to the importance of the problem of Soil Conservation, Pasture and Hay Improvement. Never before has the interest in these subjects been what it is today, and it is expected that a big audience will be present to hear Mr. Roberts and Mr. Kinney.

During the meeting, which will last the entire day, there will be periods of round-table discussion, to give the farmers attending a chance to ask questions of the "experts" on any and all subjects connected with Boone County problems.

Mr. Roberts is author of the statement that practically any land in the state can be built up to a highly productive level, equal to the best, by following practices of soil and pasture improvement now recommended as the result of years of research work under the supervision of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Mr. Roberts points out at the experimental farms throughout the state in all sections which have adapted these practices.

State Court Asked For Writ

Temporary Order Issued Granting County Man, to Prevent Enforcement of Kerr-Smith Act

The right of the government to take 33 1-3 per cent of the selling price of tobacco raised by farmers who failed to sign Agricultural Adjustment Administration contracts was attacked in injunction proceedings filed in Kenton Circuit Court last Friday.

The suit filed by O. C. Bennett, Grant county, farmer against the Kenton Local Leaf Tobacco Warehouse, Covington, and the First National Bank and Trust Company of Covington, is said to be of interest to hundreds of tobacco growers.

Although Federal laws are attacked, the petition, prepared by Sawyer A. Bennett, attorney, filed in the Circuit Court to obtain immediate action on the prayer for restraining order to prevent the bank from turning over the money now in its hands to the government.

Bennett seeks to recover from the Kenton local warehouse the $24,900 he alleges is due him on tobacco sold at the defendant's warehouse. Bennett says that on January 15, he delivered to the warehouse 408 pounds of tobacco, which was sold for $700.00. Of this he was paid $455.00, the defendant warehouse company holding $253.37. On February 7, he delivered 2,262 pounds of tobacco, which was sold for $497.78. He received $299.96. The company held $197.89 after charges had been deducted, Bennett avers.

Asserding there is $24,900 due him Bennett avers the warehouse has refused to pay on the claim that Bennett has not signed a contract with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, has not taken advantage of the Kerr-Smith Act, and that, by reason of the Kerr-Smith Act, a tax of one-third of the amount of tobacco sold, or 33 1-3 per cent of the sale price, be withheld and paid over to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as a tax under the act of Congress.

Bennett asserts that the Kerr-Smith Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act are amended under a law to levy a tax against persons, including himself, who did not sign a contract with the government. He avers the acts were unconstitutional by reason that the law was without authority to pass a law regulating the quantity of tobacco the plaintiff could raise, and the quantity he was entitled to sell. He insists that the 33 1-3 per cent tax is not a tax and never was intended as a tax due the United States but under guise of taxation for the benefit of the government, forcing the plaintiff to submit to agents of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration controlling the number of pounds and number of tobacco the plaintiff could raise in tobacco.

Bennett further contends the acts are unconstitutional and that he insists that his property is taken without due process of law under pretense of taxation.

The money, Bennett says, has been turned over to the First National Bank and Trust Company, Covington, which is holding it for distribution.

Judge Rodney G. Bryon issued a restraining order to prevent any distribution of the money until further hearing.

Although the United States Supreme Court has declared the Agricultural Adjustment Act unconstitutional it has not passed upon the Kerr-Smith Act.

Fire Destroys Entire Block

At Bedford Sunday With a Loss Estimated At $100,000

Bedford, Trimble County, Ky., was visited by a very destructive fire on Sunday. The fire originated in the rooming of W. T. Bure, in the middle of the block at 10:30. The building, an old one-story frame, was consumed by flames before even a bucket brigade could be mustered. The flames spread to the residence of Dr. W. T. Bell, dentist, B. B. Bure's grocery station, the residence of Omar Miller, two buildings, the property of C. A. Bell, one of which was a brick shop, and those of the B. Bell building. The brick walls of the bank checked the flames momentarily, and the last house erupted flames with sufficient force to blow a two-story frame, apart from the main building, and the ground floor, was saved.

The brick building suffered the most damage. It was built six years ago and new fixtures were installed only last week. The bank's vault with the flames and name of its contents were burned. It is said the bank will operate temporarily in the county court house.

Bedford has no fire department but fire departments from Carrollton, Laramie, Ky., and Madison, Ind., responded but soon exhausted their water in well and cisterns and five fire engines were used with little effect. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

Five years ago fire destroyed the block on the north side of the court house square and Sunday's fire was the block on the east side.

He was survived by his wife, Mrs. Lancaster, and two children, a son and a daughter, Scott Lancaster.

Funeral services will be held and followed that trade. His funeral took place from the Walton Methodist church, Wednesday morning, Feb. 25th, at 10 o'clock. Rev. G. B. Ontong, Java, Rites

A South Sea Island Penthouse.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

CUSTOMS have changed little in some of the South Sea islands despite frequent visits of white men. On the island of Ontong, Java, a native's power is based upon his wealth. The wealthy native pays higher prices than his poor neighbors.

As a daughter becomes old enough for marriage, the parents bedeck her with colorful dyes. First they smear the youthful body with coconut oil and then rub on the dyes, forming gay patterns. A string of shark's teeth then is placed on her head and ornaments of turtle shell suspended from the lobes of her ears.

Holes in the two alae (the outer portions of the nostrils) and the septum of her nose are made during childhood. Small shell ornaments hang from the septum and feathers plucked from birds adorn the nostrils and hair. Around her neck is a necklace of human hair and her belt and bracelet are of white coconut leaves. Thus adorned, and with a bright yellow skirt covering the lower portion of her body, she parades with her father and senior relatives around the village.

At this time the prospective husband knows it is time for him to go to his wife. That evening he visits her in her house. For a time the young wife stays with her parents. The groom visits his wife at her parents' house but he leaves his fishing paraphernalia at his father's house. He must provide her with a certain amount of raw food and she gives him cooked food and taro.

When priests were in power, the bride, at the birth of the first-born child, went to the house of one of them to preserve both herself and the child from evil influences. She was, and still is, assisted by her mother, mother-in-law and a midwife. The husband was present until the child was actually born, but then he had to leave the house and remain away for about a year. This custom is still followed.

Two Days of Noise. Shortly after the birth, the mother-in-law strikes a wooden pillow. This is the signal for everyone in the house to make a noise by beating on anything available. The din is kept up for 48 hours without ceasing. It is the expression of joy that a new life has been added to the community.

On this and the subsequent evening the relatives of the young mother and father assemble outside the house in semiformal dress—that is to say, adorned and adorned with sweet-smelling herbs and flowers. They sing the birth song, then march around the streets, singing at every corner. The first-born is always named for a dead priest, but subsequent children receive names of ancestors.

The young father, while he is excluded from his wife, has two holes cut in the alae of the nose, each about half an inch long. This is an extremely painful process, but most men are willing to submit to it because it is a sign that they are now fathers and therefore men of some standing.

Pieces of coconut shell are cut into rings about one inch across and one-fifth of an inch wide. A cut is made in the ring, and the two ends are forced apart by means of a small stick placed diametrically across. Four of the rings are fitted on each side of the nose and tied into place. The pieces of shell are then knocked out. The result is that the two ends of the ring bite into the flesh of the nose, and in two or three days a hole has been cut through the flesh.

The rings are left in for about ten days. They are then removed and the holes are stuffed with folded coconut leaves to prevent them from closing up. On special occasions ornaments of turtle shell are hung in the holes.

Funeral Rites. After marriage and birth the most important customs relate to death. There are elaborate funeral rites and ceremonies, which are practically identical for both men and women.

As soon as the dying person's heart ceases to beat, the corpse is taken into the road in front of the house and washed. It is then returned inside, the hair is cut and the body is rubbed thoroughly with coconut oil. Turtle-shell ornaments are noisily critical and foretell that the ghost of the dead man will be annoyed and send sickness.

Natives of Leuanula, Ontong Java, do not conceive of any cause of illness except the supernatural. All diseases and death are caused by the evil intervention of the spirits of those already dead.

The Builder

JOHN STROUD surveyed the shuffling crowd of nondescript before him. A dozen or more men with broken shoes and patched clothes, with weary faces, and dull eyes.

Years of hiring men on the big construction job had never quite hardened him. He needed only one man now, but he hesitated to make the choice. They all knew that Matthews had been drowned the day before, yet here were twelve men begging for his place, willing to strain and founder in the mud of the river bed, that they might eke out a pitiful existence.

"Merkle," he said, "come into the office in five minutes."

The name best into his brain like a triumphant march. Merkle... his thirty thousand spent and asking for a job. Asking Stroud, who had hated him with a consuming hatred through the years. He seated himself mechanically at his desk. Ten years since he had last seen Merkle, immaculate and smiling, with pretty Molly Langdon upon his arm. He, John Stroud, had stood shrimpingly shabby and alone upon the edge of the select crowd outside the fashionable church.

The door opened, and Merkle entered.

"So you want a job, Merkle? I'm going to keep you. Start tomorrow. That is, if you have the guts to do it."

His eyes became hard as nails. "I've always had guts, Merkle. Remember at school, how you taunted me. I had to leave school and start to work. I had always made up my mind to build bridges and roads. I saved up enough money to buy my first drafting set by doing nothing but working I needed. It was a second-hand one I bought from another boy. I didn't know it was yours, that it had been stolen from your desk at school. You accused me of stealing it. I nearly went to jail for that. Then, when I was nineteen, I felt desperately in love with Molly, but you won her. You snatched her away from me. And now you come to me. Is your money all gone?"

"Yes," Merkle said resignedly. "All gone, and Molly's left me, too. I don't blame you, I was a brute."

"Yes, I know about that; she came here. She has promised to marry me when she gets her divorce. The ragged man winced. "So you have Molly, too. I had hoped that if I ever earned the right again..."

"Here's your card. You may report tomorrow morning at seven, if you wish," said Stroud coldly.

Next morning was a day of gray rain. Stroud was at the river bank. There had been some trouble with the foundation of number three pier. He decided they would have to force more concrete into the base.

Stroud studied Merkle's spare figure in the rain-soaked shirt slithering in the river silt as he heaved with the others to move a slippery balk of timber which had shifted from its position.

He straightened suddenly. That slim figure upon the narrow plank walk down there—surely it was not Molly? Merkle's eyes were not Molly? She half-turned and he caught a glimpse of her face, rain-blurred and white. It was Molly. She drew herself up proudly. She had seen him. She was beside Merkle now.

Suddenly Stroud stiffened. Merkle had slipped. He was lying face down in the river. Why didn't the fool get up? Or why didn't others pick him up? They were leaving him, floundering through the silt, and he lay there, motionless. He had been so sure of himself. Then he suddenly saw.

The brown trickle of muddy water had increased to a torrent, and number two pier was moving, leaning drunkenly. Falling. And Merkle was there, lying as he had fallen, and the shadow of the pier was over him.

Molly had rushed to her stricken husband's side, was trying ineffectually to hold him, pulling frantically at the limp form.

With an inarticulate cry Stroud leaped down the bank, sliding and slipping in the river silt. "Molly!" he gasped. "Why didn't the fool get up? Or why didn't others pick him up? They were leaving him, floundering through the silt, and he lay there, motionless. He had been so sure of himself. Then he suddenly saw."

His groping fingers sought and found the clothing of the unconscious man, and with a superhuman effort he matched him from their lungs, smothering them.

Chic Suit, Gay Print Share Honors

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

LET'S go crystal-gazing in search of fashion futures for spring. What do we see? According to the signs of the times it's suits, suits and suits plus, coming in endless procession on the new style program. Indeed, 'tis prophesied that this will be the biggest suit season ever.

Of course a suit means just one lovely, stunning blouse after another, and, as to accessories, well, you'll be surprised at the smartness, the cleverness and the color-cake of the bags, and the belts, the scarves, the gloves and the footwear and gadgets that novel they invite a smile, all of which will play a part in dramatizing the suit theme for spring.

After you get an "eye-fall" or "suits" as revealed in the crystal globe of fashion, turn the picture shifts to a scene of riotous color and startling new design for the incoming prints are just that. Birds, fruits, vegetables, postage stamps and newspaper print, are some of the many unique motifs that gay print fabrics are staging this season.

The lesson to be gleaned in this foreboding into fashion's moves is that in assembling the new spring wardrobe one must think in terms of both cloth suit and costume. The good-looking print costume picture. The material of which it is made is an all-berber triple sheer to leaf green, brown and beige checks. The jacket with full graceful sleeves alternates bands of net with bands of the triple sheer print. Jeweled buttons lend a brilliant touch.

As to the new suits, their most outstanding message is "mannish" both as to the stunning woolsens which fashion them as well as the manner of tailoring. The more "man-wear" look your suit carries the smarter will it be. The favorite among favorites bids fair to be the strictly short-jacket type.

The Greek inspiration which has so noticeably influenced the evening mode for dresses is also affecting suit styles. There is a very strong tendency to adopt sandals or low-heeled shoes for full evening dress. These sandals are extremely comfortable for those who know how to wear them, and are seen in the same fabric as the dress—in velvet, in lame and in brocade, sometimes combined with supple gold or silver kid.

Very rich models entirely covered with sequins, with embroidery or with bands of plastic materials, are displayed by leading designers. To accompany Worth evening dresses, Juliette has designed some new sandals with almost flat heels, which are square instead of being round.

Originality Characterizes New Paris Winter Tailleurs Great originality characterizes the new winter tailleurs, for morning and afternoon purposes. In line of sport tailleurs, a jacket is almost invariably in a fabric that contrasts with the skirt. Schiaparelli shows a skirt in plain material while the jacket is in tartan or in fancy woolen. She carries the same idea for the afternoon with a plain skirt in dull rayon crepe and the jacket in a fancy mixture showing silk cellulose film.

Suede Jackets Tailored A beautifully tailored jacket of sleek brown suede with green felt inserts across the top of the pockets makes an elegant surprise present for one's sixteen-year-old daughter.

Printed Scarfs Gay printed scarfs in bright colors have a bit front and long ends that encircle the neck to the again at the front.

DR. JAMES W. BARTON
Talks About

Weight in Middle Age WHILE insurance companies would sooner have their middle-aged policyholders weigh a few pounds less than normal rather than a few pounds more, nevertheless if the individual has been of normal weight and has lost a number of pounds they like to see this weight regained.

For instance colds that "hang on," the after-effects of the flu, the presence of infected teeth or tonsils for months or years, all have a "wearing" effect upon the body tissues, also the kind of help, and the appetite so that less food is wanted. Added to this is the fact that in this "run down" condition the individual has less desire to go out, or move, and this also lessens the need and the desire for food.

In order then to build or to fatten up these thin individuals, two things are necessary, first removing anything that may be interfering with the appetite and digestion, and, second, giving the kinds of food that will build tissue.

This means then a complete examination by the family physician and dentist so that infected teeth and tonsils may be removed, and slow acting liver and intestine stimulants to activity by very small doses of epsom salts daily for a few weeks, and the use of bending exercises with knees straight.

Fresh Air Aids Appetite. Encouraging the thin individual to get outdoors stimulates the appetite as the extra oxygen in the outdoor air turns up food completely, thus increasing the demand for more food.

The building up diet means that more food than seems to be needed should be taken daily, and it should be "rich" food. The diet should include plenty of milk, eggs, fresh animal proteins, and cereals—vegetable proteins, as the principal work of the proteins in building tissue. The daily use of foods rich in minerals—lime, iron, phosphorus, and iodine, and also rich in vitamins, is very necessary for building up the body tissues.

The "rich" foods for body building are butter, cream, fat meat, eggs, salad dressings, bacon, cereals, bread, sugar, cream soups, peas and beans, nuts, dried fruits—the exact foods that are "forbidden" to those wishing to reduce weight.

Of course any of the above foods—fat meats, pastries or rich sauces which may have a tendency to "disagree" with the thin individual—may be eaten or used in very small quantities.

The best proteins are meat, milk, and eggs, but even eggs disagree with a considerable number and even milk with a few.

Foods Rich in Minerals. Fruit and vegetables are not only rich in the minerals and vitamins, but the roughage or fiber in them gently irritates the lining of the large intestine and stimulates the movement of wastes, preventing constipation.

Many thin individuals actually have small stomachs or the stomach may hang low due to lack of fat supporting the abdominal organs. This means that rich foods in small bulk would be best if they do not disagree.

Thus a small quantity of butter at each meal, plenty of cream, bacon and salad dressings, with olive oil after each meal are simple but effective means of getting 20 to 30 per cent more food calories eaten daily.

In institutions where body building or increased weight is a great part of the treatment—tuberculosis sanitariums—extra food is given between meals and at bed time. The best foods to use between meals are milk, eggs and milk—eggs, nogs, and fruit juices.

Cutting Down on Salt SALT will hold 70 times its weight of water in the system and water is needed to keep the body processes in good working condition.

However there are times when too much water in the tissues is really a hindrance to the proper working of the body processes. For instance, in inflamed conditions of the mucous membranes of the nose and throat such as occurring in ordinary head colds or in inflammation of the sinuses, adjoining the nose it has been found that cutting down the amount of salt eaten or avoiding salt in the food entirely lessens the inflammation.

Dr. S. Markes, Berlin, tried to find a method to find out to what extent a salt-free diet influenced inflammation. The test was made on 30 patients and it was found that the inflammation was reduced during the time the salt intake was reduced, and that when more salt was again taken the inflammation became more severe.

BUT ALWAYS HIGH

The wages of sin are never agreed on beforehand.

A liquid can always be taken in gradually reduced doses. Reduced dosage is the real secret of relief from constipation.

Ask a doctor about this. Ask your druggist how very popular Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has become. It gives the right kind of help, and the amount of help. Taking a little less each time, gives the bowels a chance to act of their own accord, until they are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin contains salts and laxatives—both natural laxatives that form no habit. The action is gentle, but sure. It will relieve any sluggishness or bilious condition due to constipation without upset.

Right: Fight If one has rights, one has always to be in a fight with some one.

New Deal Wins in Tennessee Valley Case—Picking Delegates for National Conventions—Substitute Farm Bill Pushed to Passage.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SCORE one for the New Deal, and a big one. The Supreme court in its long awaited decision ruled that the Tennessee Valley Authority act is valid, on all points at issue in the suit brought by stockholders of the Alabama Power company. Under the ruling the administration is free to go ahead with its power program in the Tennessee valley, actually under way. The decision was read by Chief Justice Hughes.

Because of circumscribed limits the decision was much narrower than most of the New Deal findings of the Supreme court. It was limited strictly to the terms of the contract on which the suit was brought, namely, acquisition of TVA of a transmission line to convey power from the Wilson dam.

Certain phases are still open for possible legal contest in the future, and only Wilson dam and the dam or any other dam constructed or projected on the Tennessee river was involved in the finding.

The legal right of the federal government to acquire and own transmission lines to a market for surplus energy—never before directly passed upon by the United States Supreme court—was upheld in the affirmative. Unanswered is the question of what constitutes surplus power.

Among the chief points in the majority opinion were these:

The government had full authority to build Wilson dam—keystone of TVA.

The government has undisputed power to order disposal of electricity developed at the dam.

The government acted legally in building or obtaining through purchase from private parties certain transmission lines to transport power to a wider market.

The government has the same right to dispose of surplus power as it would have to dispose of copper, gold, and minerals on public lands.

Justice McReynolds in answer to this said:

"If under the this mask of disposing of property the United States can enter the business of generating, transmitting and selling power, as when and wherever, some board may apply the mask of definite design to accomplish ends wholly beyond the sphere marked out for them by the Constitution, an easy way has been found for breaking down the limitations of the statute supposed to guarantee protection against aggression."

BOTH house and senate passed the resolution extending for one year the existing embargo on arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and prohibiting loans and credits to belligerents.

Senator Nye was out of the city when the senate assembled, an hour earlier than usual, to act on the measure. Hearing what was going on, he flew from Minneapolis through a storm and arrived in minutes before the final vote, but too late to put through any of his proposed amendments. One amendment that was dropped provided that after the President had issued his proclamation of the existence of war between or among two or more foreign countries, it shall be unlawful for any citizen to purchase in this country bonds or other obligations of any belligerent. The President is authorized to exempt ordinary commerce credits and short time obligations.

SELECTIONS of delegates to the national conventions, already being made in some states, are interesting, especially in the New York. Representative Fish, supporting Borah for the Republican Presidential nomination, led a hot fight to displace some of the "old guard" and into the state committee naming these delegates at large:

Charles D. Hilles and Mrs. Ruth Pratt, members of the state committee; Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, vice chairman of the state committee; Representative Bertrand H. Snell, minority leader of the house; Representative James W. Wadsworth, former United States senator; Edward H. Butler, publisher of the Buffalo Evening News; John R. Crews, Brooklyn leader; Charles H. Griffiths, Westchester county chairman.

Tammany made public the list of its delegates to the Democratic convention, and it is headed by Alfred E. Smith, who will represent the tip of Manhattan and Staten Island. President Roosevelt was called on to choose the California Demo-

CRONE of the most spectacular and dynamic figures in American life of today passed with the death of Brig. Gen. William Mitchell in a New York hospital. He succumbed to a heart attack and influenza at the age of fifty-seven years. "Bully," as he was known to airmen, was commander in chief of the American air forces in France during the World War and was decorated by six governments. Afterwards, while yet in the regular service, he severely criticized the government's air preparedness policy and was court-martialed and suspended. In immediately resigning, he devoted himself to building and writing further his demands for a separate department of aviation in the cabinet, combining both army and navy air defense. Gen. Charles P. Summerall once aptly described Mitchell as the kind of soldier "who is wonderful in war and terrible in peace."

SENATOR HUGO L. BLACK of Alabama and his lobby investigation committee are creating a flood of resentment among American citizens that is likely to do vastly more harm than any New Deal. Quite without concealment Black is using the committee in a way that threatens the people do not like.

He sent out a questionnaire to individuals and organizations known to him, and he refused to answer the questions, and they are supported in this position by the American Liberty League, which has challenged the right of Black's committee to compel answer under oath to the queries. In effect, the league demands that the committee should be empowered to subpoena the senators who are in contempt of the senate those who refuse to reply to the questionnaire.

Senator Black's only reply to this was that it was "a little difficult to believe that the league would attempt to intimidate or coerce its own members to keep their mouths shut until the date when they can talk."

UNLESS Governor Hoffman of New Jersey grants him another reprieve, Bruno's captivities will be executed during the month of March 30 for the kidnapping and killing of the Lindbergh baby. Sentence on the German carpenter has been pronounced for several days Samuel Liebowitz, noted New York criminal lawyer, tried to get Hauptmann to tell another story and reveal his accomplices in the kidnapping and murder.

Sen. Black's only reply to this was that it was "a little difficult to believe that the league would attempt to intimidate or coerce its own members to keep their mouths shut until the date when they can talk."

Charles M. Schwab, seventy-four, still specializes in optimism, like the man who went to the race track, lost every cent, but escaped death in the railroad wreck. Mr. Schwab says labor conditions are the best in 50 years. He should know; he began as a laborer in 1890 and got $5, or $3, or $2 a day. Industry he calls a "three-legged stool." Capital, labor, management are the three legs.

Charles M. Schwab back where he was 50 years ago, the same as then, in age and energy, and he would soon be at the head of a great industry. Who does not believe it does not know Schwab.

Russia, trying everything, experiments with a steam-propelled turbine plane for atmospheric flights. At such heights water boils at half the temperature necessary at sea level. The exhaust steam after heating the plane would be recovered 90 per cent. Two years ago William and George Post, in Los Angeles, built and flew a plane with a steam engine. There is still much to learn about flying.

Uncle Sam, convinced that he is his brother's keeper, after all, wants a peace agreement among all American republics.

Beautiful, but if any republic decides to fight, anyhow, it is to be hoped this country will not become an arbitrator.

"Judge not that ye be not judged," is sound advice.

We can no more decide the right and wrong of a row between Mussolini and England, or Chile and the Argentine, than we could between the two Kilkenny cats.

It is pleasing to learn from George Washington University of a new and "refreshing" preparation that makes possible childbirth "during sound sleep" without pain.

More and better children, bigger population, is what the world needs with gradual elimination of the hopelessly inferior race by absorption, or voluntary extermination.

Poor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, waiting for the rainy season to expel the Italians, suddenly found his army of 80,000 driven hither and thither, and two other armies, under two of his ablest "rulers," sent scattering into the jungle.

Seventy thousand Italians seizing a mountain fort in Ethiopia, thought impregnable to the Mussolini kind of "rainy season" with bombs from the sky. This time the Italians found their own Italian soldiers, not his native troops from Eritrea.

Chancellor Hitler announces: "We have solved the problem of producing synthetic gasoline and rubber. How good are the synthetic fuel and rubber; how cheap? These things will come, for science in the material world can do everything better than nature can do it."

Fuel will be created, and flying machines, too, as far above today's airplanes as electric light is above whale oil, and the airplane above the ox-cart.

New Jersey high schools will be closed in "safe" and "profile driving," a good idea. All school boys should learn to handle automobiles and airplanes.

What a Troubled World?

What Will TVA Do?

Schwab Still Smiles

Steam Turbine Planes

Will this troubled world ever calm down, supply work to those who will do it?

And live happily, and enable superior ability to show what it is made of?

Spain, waking from long lethargy, is swept by riots, jails stuffed, and set afire. Rioting and a rebellion in South America.

Some suggest putting power in every farm, regardless of distance or cost, as rural mail delivery is put on every farm.

If every home is entitled to government mail delivery, every farm should be entitled to government power delivery on the same basis. That would mean business for copper companies, more running water in cow barns, more irrigated garden patches, more electric light after sundown in chicken coops.

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington. — We have a new farm relief law on the way. The natural and logical question is, what does it mean? A parallel question is, what will it do? And, among the cold and non-paternalistic analysts of the Washington press one also hears a third question, namely, is the membership of any of the numerous farm plans, Republican or Democratic, sincere?

Relief Law

Congress, for the sake of its position in the future, is attempting to supplant the Invaluable Agricultural Adjustment act with a law about which its individual campaigning members are not sure which they can point with pride.

But there are other and unofficial farm plans bobbing up here, there and everywhere. It seems to be the belief of the farm plan promoters that the farm plan promoters are grounded completely in sound practice. Each of them ought to be conceded commendation for some of the provisions they include. None of them, including that which is backed by the New Dealers, is going to completely solve the farm problem because we are going to have the farm plan promoters next year and the next and a good many years thereafter which we like it or not.

The tragedy of the current situation is that the farm relief proposals are being put forward by the farm plan promoters individually or collectively, constituted—was going to say a mess and on second thought I believe that is the most appropriate word to use in connection with the farm plan promoters. The farm plan promoters are not going to take the place of AAA.

First, the administration proposes to take something like five million dollars each year in the form of a loan or a grant to the farmer to use these funds to save the soil, to prevent erosion, to produce more food, to produce more food by continued cropping. New Dealers describe the purpose as prevention of erosion.

With that purpose, it seems to me, there can be no quarrel. Ever since the successive portions of our country were settled and the forest covering the land has been subject to erosion by rain, flood and wind. The Department of Agriculture says that the top soil of probably fifty million acres has been destroyed in that manner. It would seem, then, that it was high time our government was finding ways to stop it.

Admitting the soundness of this plan, the question is, then, must turn to another phase and is not written into law but results from it. If the fertility of soil is improved, is it not natural, then, that there should be an increase in production? And if there is an increase in production, is it not logical that we may find ourselves developing a huge surplus of commodities in the farm and with no foreign market? The answer obviously is, yes.

So, we find these two circumstances in the administration farm bill, proposed, ever driven, by a group of New Dealers who, until a few months ago, were declaring here and there everywhere that to maintain price we must have scarcity of production. That theory was basic in the AAA and was carried out to the furthest by Secretary Wallace and Administrator Chester Davis.

There seems to be no doubt among students of the farm problem that a subsidy, whether by that name or by some other phrase, for agriculture cannot be avoided. Some way, somehow, money is going to be taken out of the federal treasury to put into the hands of the farm population. I do not know whether anyone can predict where such a policy will lead as a long-range program. Political figures seem to content with a temporary solution, something to get farm votes. In all of the debate that has moved through the ventricles of the senate and the house, discussion of the farm problem on a long-term basis has been noticeably absent.

This fact is just as true when as to New Deal farm programs are subjected to a searching analysis as is

With that purpose, it seems to me, there can be no quarrel. Ever since the successive portions of our country were settled and the forest covering the land has been subject to erosion by rain, flood and wind. The Department of Agriculture says that the top soil of probably fifty million acres has been destroyed in that manner. It would seem, then, that it was high time our government was finding ways to stop it.

Admitting the soundness of this plan, the question is, then, must turn to another phase and is not written into law but results from it. If the fertility of soil is improved, is it not natural, then, that there should be an increase in production? And if there is an increase in production, is it not logical that we may find ourselves developing a huge surplus of commodities in the farm and with no foreign market? The answer obviously is, yes.

So, we find these two circumstances in the administration farm bill, proposed, ever driven, by a group of New Dealers who, until a few months ago, were declaring here and there everywhere that to maintain price we must have scarcity of production. That theory was basic in the AAA and was carried out to the furthest by Secretary Wallace and Administrator Chester Davis.

There seems to be no doubt among students of the farm problem that a subsidy, whether by that name or by some other phrase, for agriculture cannot be avoided. Some way, somehow, money is going to be taken out of the federal treasury to put into the hands of the farm population. I do not know whether anyone can predict where such a policy will lead as a long-range program. Political figures seem to content with a temporary solution, something to get farm votes. In all of the debate that has moved through the ventricles of the senate and the house, discussion of the farm problem on a long-term basis has been noticeably absent.

This fact is just as true when as to New Deal farm programs are subjected to a searching analysis as is

Uncommon Sense

The great teacher is the greatest of builders. Other men can patch together a broken leg, but the great teacher drive germs out of the system and produce masterpieces of machinery or wonders in art.

But the teacher turns out masterpieces of thought and industry. He finds in those who sit at his feet the possibilities of greatness.

He supplies them with the training they need. Recognizing that they have better than the average minds, he forces them to use those minds.

When former President Garfield was in Washington, one of his friends asked him how much schooling he had, and how he got it. For Garfield had been a poor Ohio boy, working on a canal.

"I had very few school masters," said the former President. "Only one. I remember gave me any education, that was I had, I got sitting on a log extending out into a river."

"Well, did that give you an education?"

"He did," said Garfield, "perhaps the fact that Mark Hopkins was sitting on the log beside me had something to do with it."

Mark Hopkins was one of the greatest teachers of his age. And I think it highly probable if some ordinary man had been Garfield's mentor, the name of Garfield would not be so famous as it is, now, with all due respect to the younger Garfield, who is a man of great ability. But it is quite probable that the older Garfield, remembering all that Hopkins had taught, made the younger Garfield more ambitious than he might have been otherwise.

The greatest builders are the teachers who can awaken young people to the importance of learning.

You read a great deal of self-help material. But if you follow back to the beginnings you find that practically all of them have been brought into contact with men who have taught them the right way and pointed out the right path on which to travel.

Contact with men of great minds, who know how to direct to others their own thoughts, is a high incentive to learning and to success.

The college boy who can make a friend of a highly intelligent man in the faculty "starts running."

Unless he is lucky enough to find more when he gets out of school, than if he had made his mentor the football coach, or spent as much time as he had "curried classes."

Independence is something that we all of us want and struggle for, but never completely attain.

Put any one of us "Lords of Creation" out in the desert and leave him there for a while.

Unless he is lucky enough to find more when he gets out of school, than if he had made his mentor the football coach, or spent as much time as he had "curried classes."

Take your own case.

Were it not for organization of industry of every sort, how long could you last?

It is possible that you might learn how to build a home and rear crops, provided you had a supply of timber and seed.

You might be able to kill game, if you lived where game was to be found.

But that would be about as far as you would get.

Adam was in a better position than you are to build a home and rear crops, provided you had a supply of timber and seed.

At least had a garden which provided his meals.

A baby is not more dependent on its mother's milk than a modern man being in for his shelter and his food. You hear a great deal about self-made men, who without any assistance build great and successful careers.

But such men could accomplish nothing without the co-operation and help of others.

The architect can design a great building, but he must summon the help of hundreds of other men before he can construct it.

Napoleon could plan a campaign, but he not only had to depend on thousands of men for the rank and file for his army, but on many military leaders who were almost his equals in his command as an army. If not in planning a campaign.

Fortunately all of us are able to get help from others. The examples of able men, and the work they did before we were born we can utilize if we will.

Education is little more than an acquired ability to profit by the example of those who have gone before us.

You are lucky in living in an age which has such a record of accomplishment and which you can turn to your own advantage.

You must work largely benefiting by what has been done by others.

SONGS THEY SANG IN OTHER PRESIDENTIAL YEARS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

LADIES and gentlemen of America! The "greatest show on earth" is about to begin!

No, this announcement hasn't anything to do with P. T. Barnum, the Ringling brothers, "Buffalo Bill" Cody or any of the others who have made circus history.

This "greatest show on earth" is the quadrennial drama of a Presidential election.

So . . . hold your horses, because . . .

A campaign is coming, with its songs, its slogans, its symbols and—its slanders! The singing is already under way. The other night Senator William E. Borah of Idaho appeared in Brooklyn to make a speech which, it was commonly agreed, was his opening bid for the Republican nomination. At that meeting his followers sang, to the tune of "U. S. That Means Us," the following:

Borah rah, rah, rah,
Ring out his name far and wide,
Borah rah, rah, rah,
Join the cheer that swells the countryside.

Let all the nation hear his call,
A "fair deal," a "square deal" for all.
Borah rah, rah, rah,
The choice of Americans all.

And now that the singing is started it's safe to predict that it will continue to the November 4. For in campaign year America has always "gone lyrical." It started away back at the beginning of the republic when George Washington was the inevitable choice for first President of the United States. At that time everyone joined in singing:

George Washington, the hero's come!
Each heart, exulting, hears the sound;
Thousands to their deliverer throng,
And shout him welcome all around!

All of which adulation for the man who was "First in War, First in Peace and First in the Hearts of His Countrymen" was very fine, but, of course, politics being what they were even in those early times, it just couldn't last. Washington's second term was far from being a happy one, for by the time he left office there were two parties, the Federalists and the Republicans (ancestors of the Democrats today), engaged in a bitter contest for power.

John Adams was the candidate of the Federalist aristocrats and Thomas Jefferson of the Republican "common people." Taxes, states rights and other issues over which there was a

"Old Hickory" partisans, recalling his victory at New Orleans, sang lustily:

We are a hardy, free-born race
Each man to fear a stranger;
Whatever the game we join in chase,
Despising toil and danger;
And if a daring foe annoys,
Whatever his strength and force,
We'll show him that Kentucky boys
Are "alligator horses!"

I s'pose you've read it in the prints,
How Jacksonham attempted
To make Old Hickory Jackson wine,
And soon his schemes repented;
For we with ripe ready cock'd
Thought such occasion lucky,
And soon around the general cock'd
The hunters of Kentucky.

This campaign, however, was as nothing compared to that put on by the "Singing Whigs" in 1840 in support of their candidate, Gen. William Henry Harrison, in his race against Martin Van Buren, the Democratic occupant of the White House. Harrison was literally sung into the Presidency. Early in the campaign a Democratic editor had made the mistake of saying about Harrison, "Give him a barrel of elder and a pension of two thousand a year, and our word for it, he will sit the remainder of his days in a log cabin by the side of a sea coal fire and study moral philosophy."

Immediately the Indignant Whigs sprang to the defense of their candidate. They made much of the fact that the Democrats, under the leadership of the broadcloth-clad, aristocratic Martin Van Buren of New York, had deserted the "common people" and were casting slurs upon their General Harrison, "Old Tippecanoe," who was a plain man and a poor man. So they began to sing:

Let Van from his coolers of silver drink wine,
And lounge on his cushioned settee,
Our man on his buckeye bench can recline,
Content with hard cider is he.
Then a shout for each freeman, a shout for each!

To the plain, honest tubsman true,
And the "Red" motto, the motto of fate,
Hurrah for old Tippecanoe!

And on this wave of singing hysteria another military hero was swept into the Presidency. Four years later Van Buren was seeking the Democratic nomination again, but he was turned down and the prize given to the first "dark horse" in political history—James K. Polk of Tennessee. Even before this happened, the Whigs had nominated Henry Clay of Kentucky, who had tried twice before (in 1824 and again in 1832) to be the Democratic standard-bearer. Theodore Frelinghuysen of New York was named as his running mate, so again the Whigs went into a singing campaign shouting:

Hurrah, hurrah! The country's right!
For Henry Clay and Frelinghuysen!

The Democrats were capable of doing a bit of vocalizing themselves, so they sang right back:

Farewell, oh! farewell to Clay, Kentucky,
We'll leave thee to wander by Salt River's shore;
We well might have known that thy cause was unlucky.

For the Democrats beat thee so often before!
That song was a true prophecy, for the Democrats did beat Clay again and elected Polk. But the Whigs had their revenge four years later when again they nominated a military hero and began singing the praises of

Old Zach Taylor, bold and steady
Sometimes "Rough," but always "Ready."

For his running mate they named Millard Fillmore of New York. One of their songs declared:

The ball is opened on both sides,
The parties now have made their choice.
Case on the Loco downer rides,
The Whigs for Taylor give their voice.

Pull, boys, all pull steady,
For Fillmore and for Rough and Ready.

The Democrats, who had nominated Lewis Cass of Michigan for President and Gen. William O. Butler of Kentucky, American war hero, for vice president, roared back at them:

They come in Democratic van,
From old Kentucky and Michigan,
Within the nation's seat to shine,
In eighteen hundred and forty-nine.
For every state declares it so,
That Cass and Butler in must go.
Next Fourth of March will prove it so,
For thus have freedom willed it, oh!

But the Whigs were better prepared when they sang:

He's on victory's track, and he can't be put back,
For the people have said that they trust in old Zach;
So our brave Rough and Ready in triumph shall run,
Till the White House is reached, and our victory won!

A Campaign Song of 1840.

So "Old Rough and Ready" was sung into the Presidency, just as "Old Tippecanoe" had been.

The campaign of Franklin Pierce vs. Gen. Winfield Scott in 1852 was a comparatively colorless one but 1856 was another case of "whoop it up with song and shouting." The slavery question was the big issue. The "Know-Nothing" party, formed largely of pro-slavery Whigs, nominated Fillmore. The Democratic party nominated James Buchanan of Pennsylvania and the new Republican party in its first national convention nominated Gen. James C. Fremont, the so-called "Patriarch." Thousands of Free-Souls, with an almost religious zeal, sang:

All hail to Fremont! swell the lofty acclaim
Like winds from the mountain, like prairie
Ours the Pathfinder is forth on his hunt.
Clear the way for free soil, for free men and free land!

However, the "Pathfinder" couldn't find the way to the White House, for Buchanan was elected. When the next campaign year came around another candidate came out of the West and won the Presidency. He was Abraham Lincoln, the "Great Emancipator."

Lincoln was elected in 1860. He was a plain man and a poor man. So they began to sing:

Let Van from his coolers of silver drink wine,
And lounge on his cushioned settee,
Our man on his buckeye bench can recline,
Content with hard cider is he.

Then a shout for each freeman, a shout for each!

with the affectionate and vote-gathering characterization of "Old" "Old Abe" Lincoln, the Illinois rail-splitter. So the Republicans sang:

Hurrah for our cause,
Of all causes best,
Hurrah for Old Abe,
The honest Abe of the West!

And right back at them the Democrats sang derisively:

Say he's capable and honest,
Loves his country's good alone;
Never drank a drop of whiskey,
Wouldn't know it from a stone!

Any lie you tell—we'll swallow—
Swallow any kind of mixture;
But, oh, don't—we pray and beg you—
Don't, for God's sake, show his picture!

Ulysses S. Grant, regarded as the savior of the Union, didn't have much difficulty in winning the election of 1868 so no songs of any importance came out of that campaign. Four years later, when Horace Greeley gave him more opposition, one of the songs which his supporters sang declared that

General Grant's the man
To work for Uncle Sam.
He will lead the van
And beat the Greasy clan.

We'll trust him still to rule the nation,
Rule the nation, rule the nation,
We'll trust him still to rule the nation.
He saved our glorious Union.

During the Hayes-Tilden campaign of 1876, even the little children were familiar with the song that declared

Hayes rides a white horse,
Tilden rides a mule,
Hayes is a gentleman,
Tilden is a fool!

The Cleveland-Blaire campaign of 1894 was noteworthy for its songs, the most famous being the Democratic hymn which declared that

From Maine to California,
The people loudly shout
"We'll vote for Grover Cleveland, who Will turn the racists out!"

The McKinley-Bryan campaign saw a revival of the Hayes-Tilden doggerel with McKinley riding the white horse and Bryan riding the mule. When Alton B. Parker and Theodore Roosevelt were the opponents in 1904 the Democrats came out with the lyrical prophecy that

He will always keep the nation's credit safe and sound,
And will outlast dishonest men wherever they are found.
He will bury Tilden under forty feet of ground;
Then B. Parker is his name and he'll turn the racists out!

But he didn't. For, to the tune of that popular Spanish-American war song, "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," the Rough Rider went back to the White House again.

During the next two decades campaign songs were not so potent as were slogans and catchwords—like, until 1928 when Al Smith was the Democratic candidate. Then "The Sidewalks of New York," a song of the "gay nineties" was revived and it swept the country into a frenzy of singing. But it didn't sweep it into a frenzy of voting for the Democratic candidate. Even though "Who? Hoover!" as a good campaign ballad, couldn't compare with the "Sidewalks," Hoover was elected nevertheless.

As for the last campaign, every one remembers how the American people, wanting to believe that the depression was over, joined lustily singing "Happy Days Are Here Again" and in sending the smiling prophet of that belief to the White House.

What will be the outstanding song of the 1936 campaign? That question can be answered better on the morning of November 5 than it can be answered now!

Strobeck Chess town

By E. P. O'BRYAN

WCU Service

Chess Is Taught in Schools of Strobeck.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WCU Service.

"Strobeck, the chess town, is in the Hartz mountains, near Humberstadt, only a step off your route from Berlin to Weimar," says the German guide. At dusk four hours after you have left Leipzig, you are deposited, somewhat bewildered, at a little brick station surrounded by yellow stubble fields and a few old oaks. Not a sign of a town can be seen. "Where's Strobeck?" you ask the agent with some concern, as the train disappears around a bend and leaves you in the shadows. "Over yonder, where you see the gray church spire among the green trees. It's only a half hour away by foot," he replies with a quizzical smile.

With no taxis or other means of transportation in sight, you leave your bags at the station and start off toward the town.

Finally you land breathlessly in front of the village inn, the Gasthof Schultenbergs, on the edge of a public square. You are in Strobeck, the only place in all Germany, if not all Europe, where the royal art of chess is taught year after year in the school.

Adjoining your simple quarters in the inn is the huge entertainment hall devoted to chess, the best room in the house. The walls are decorated with paintings and mottoes. On the tables are the chessboards, ivory pieces and pawns and other precious sets, hand-carved and charmed by local artists.

You may be shown the old-fashioned chessboard, not exhibited to everybody. It illustrates the character of the village and on it is the inscription that was given to Strobeck by the Elector of Brandenburg on May 13, 1601.

"Strobeck must be a quiet place in which to sleep, after the seething capitals of Europe," you dare to hope, as you retire between feather beds to rest in August.

False hope! Across the cobblestone way is a tiny bakery shop with a bell on the door. Every time a clock is sent for a loaf of bread or a cookie the bell tinkles merrily. Strobeck's inalienable dose population barks most of the night.

Ramble Through the Town. At 5 a. m. the wagons clatter over the cobblestones to the fields; for Strobeck's 1,400 inhabitants are only chess-minded but are naturally-minded as well. Every driver entertains himself by cracking his whip over the brawny backs of his oxen.

The game begins to bubble, bubble here and bubble, bubble there, and the hens begin to cluck, cluck to the chicks, and the cows low all over the town. Strobeck is up and doing.

You breakfast on bread, chocolate, and a dash of golden marmalade. Then a guide takes you in tow for a sight-seeing ramble. Many of the red-tiled houses of the medieval village remind you of the picturesque cottages of old England. On some of them are black and white targets, and others suggest the influence of chess in their style of architecture.

On the fringe of the village are found men and women in a cloud of dust threshing rye, from which the everyday bread of Strobeck is made. The fertile fields surrounding the village have been swept clean and the crops of rye, oats, wheat, barley, potatoes and beets are being stored.

Finally you arrive at school where your guide introduces you and explains your mission to the master. He, in turn, introduces you to his flock of boys and girls ranging in age from ten to fourteen. These children carry their chessboards to school as naturally as American school children carry their books.

"This is the only grade in which we teach the children how to play chess," says the master. "We teach the game during the last three months of the school year—January, February, and March. The children attend school, however, every month in the year—from 7 to noon in summer and 8 to noon and 1 to 3 p. m. in winter."

Chess in the School Room. Like the royal children of the Kingdom of Cyrus, who had to learn the laws of chess "along with their mother's milk," so the children of Strobeck learn early, with their ABC's, to master the rules and regulations of the game. "How many rooks have you here?" you ask of the master.

Honeymoon Handicap

WCU Service

"A L L right," says Grace, giving Bert a winking look. "Go right ahead, duck, if that's the way you feel. Shoot the piece."

"Listen, sweetheart—Bert's words dripped honey. But wouldn't with a gal like Grace for a bride? 'Why, darling, Spring Dance—"

"Tippitoe is still my choice," Grace said indifferently. "I'm putting my money on him."

"Our money, darling. I've got something to say, you know."

That was the way it had been going all day. For a honeymoon couple Bert and Grace were getting off to a good start. Evelyn and I had chanced to run into them that morning—and there had been hardly a peaceful moment between them. Every bet either of them made was just another fly in the ointment of happiness.

Grace was the instigator of every row between them. If a woman ever counted a good look in the eye, it was Grace. She was just what Bert wasn't the kind to start socking before the ink was dry on the license. She'd lost a lot of Bert's dough and now she was trying desperately to win some of it back by plunging.

Finally Evelyn stuck her head in, as women will when they have stood about all they can. "I'll tell you what, let's call the last race the Honeymoon Handicap. You pick your horse, Bert, and let Grace pick hers. No argument, you understand. Agree on both much you'll bet and that much and no more. Winner takes everybody to supper. No winner, I treat. Fair enough?"

"O. K.," Bert says. "All right by me. Anyway, my horse is running in that race."

Grace looks at her program. "Mine, too, smartie. See! Tippitoe. I'm on. Let's make it fifty dollars."

That settled it—temporarily. Things went beautifully for while. Then the argument started all over again. Bert was foolish to throw his money away on a plug like Spring Dance. She hadn't any record. Hadn't you a race all spring?

"Now take Tippitoe," Bert says. "Oh, that jackrabbit!" Bert says in disgust. "You're making a mistake, sweetheart. Any other horse but him."

It finally got around to the last race. First Grace went away by herself and came back in about five minutes, then Bert went off to the purse. Then Bert moseyed off. When he came back he was tucking a fifty-dollar ticket in his wallet. They had made their bet.

The horse got off quickly. Sergeant Major, the favorite, went into the lead. He was three lengths out at the first turn. The others strung out behind him like a pack of wolves after a rabbit. There was nothing to it. When they came around the turn into the home stretch, Sergeant Major had everything his own way.

"By Jove!" he nearly dropped dead. Coming down the home stretch right on Sergeant Major's heels was Spring Dance. Where that little filly came from, he didn't know. Just as he was materialized out of thin air. Now they were neck and neck and it looked like a race. Then the crowd went mad. "You've seen them do that—when the favorite is challenged. It's always a thrill. Then Spring Dance snatched the lead and he started hammering Bert over the head with his cup and yelling bloody murder. I was helping that little filly all I could. She came down the home stretch like something on wheels. She was graceful. Then she flashed by my winner by at least three lengths. Sergeant Major was second and Bonaparte third.

I looked Bert to see if I'd have to help hold him, but he'd sort of slumped over against the rail, as if to support himself. His face looked like something that had run down a canvas. It was that long. Suddenly he began to crouch.

"Think of it," he moaned. "I was all set to bet on that horse and she won my wife—Grace—talked me out of it."

"You mean you don't bet on Spring Dance after all?"

"If I—no! Let her run me out of it, I tell you. I figured man she was right, and if she was she'd hold it over me like a club the rest of my life, so I played safe and bet on Tippitoe."

Just then the price went up. Eighty-four dollars. And Bert's money sounded like a steamboat down the river. He slumped down and out on the ground, his head in his hands. "Lord, O Lord!" he groaned. "Think of it! I'd have won a couple of grand if I hadn't let Grace talk me like that. If I only hadn't listened—"

I tried to console him, but it wasn't much use. He kept on moaning. Suddenly Grace ran up waving a flock of bills.

"Lookie, darling! Look! I won, and thanks for the tip, dearest." She gave him a look that was all eyes and hot breath. "Sweetheart, what's the matter? Aren't you glad I won, too? I'll always bet the way you want me to after this. Honest, I will. Kiss me."

Spring Hat Bright Spot on Horizon

By CHERRIE NICHOLAS

Veils and Flowers. While we started out telling of the tinniness of some of the new hats, please do not conclude that every new spring model has been reduced to postage stamp size. On the contrary some of the smartest numbers on the style program have brains. Shallow-crowned sailors are all the go, especially the Breton types which are shown in felt or stitched silk, and the latest swaggar note is the Breton made of gay patent leather. Then, too, the hat with a visor made of silk, quilled or stitched is very popular. Young girls are charmed with the idea of the new "Rose of the South" hat with its wide round rolled-up brim and that which captures fancy most of all, its chin strap of fancy cord. Also in this class is the new Argentine type which likewise has a chin strap, but the cord is of a different material, felt, their vogue is assured.

We are following up our state about hats of Lilliputian size by including two such in the accompanying illustration. To the right in group is a Paris model which goes to verify this new trend. It is a toque of dotted grosgrain trimmed at the back with a feather and a veil which is not a veil. However, this bow of open mesh conveys an important message of veiling tied in bows and we might add matching bows at the throat are cited in fashion reports.

The off-the-face hat above proclaims the existing fair of gray color. It is a bright Chinese red straw. Band and bow are of black velvet. The print gown is black and white.

A very smart shallow navy straw Breton concludes the group. The bouquet atop the crown and the inset about the neckline are made of multi-colored leather.

Chinese Mode Seen in Paris Fashions. China put an original spin on the new spring mode shown in 1936 fashion displays.

Chinese lingerie red appeared in trimmings, Chinese motifs marked belt buckles and Chinese figures were stamped on prints.

Black tulleon frocks were designed along simple, high necked lines, suggestive of oriental suavity. Some black dinner frocks were topped by knee-length coats of forest green or red patent leather, which were cut along Chinese inspiration.

A slender silhouette, high neckline and accented shoulderline, marked by big topped sleeves gathered into the armpits, distinguished the Paris profile shown so far.

Waists are normal and busts are definitely outlined.

Smartest Black Costumes Touched With Vivid Colors. Bright touches either as trimmings or in the way of accessories are dramatizing the season's smartest black costumes. Perhaps it will be embroidery done in vivid colored yarns or a row of striking red buttons on the breast of red patent leather.

As to accessories the most striking item is the new gloves which are being shown in high colors including red, green, blue and black, and the natural camels shade is especially sponsored by smart Parisiennes.

New Trend Is Exhibited in Double-Date Fashions. A simple gown with a broken sleeve line and a draped skirt can be arranged to cover a low-cut back, express the latest trend in double-date fashions. It is becoming more popular than the sleeveless gown and coatee.

HOW ARE YOU TODAY?

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Talks About

Underweight Children. IN THESE days when parents are trying to reduce weight, the fact that their youngsters is a little underweight may not disturb them very much.

However just as overweight is a liability in adults past forty, so is underweight a liability or menace to health in children.

Sometimes parents who are quite thin as youngsters and are now much overweight think nothing of their young being underweight as they think it is a natural or inherited condition. Now there is no question but that children usually resemble their parents—it couldn't be otherwise—but that children must be thin or underweight and remain underweight because the parent they resemble was very thin, is not necessarily true. Dr. James S. McLeister, Birmingham, Ala., the noted nutrition expert and this year president of the American Medical Association says, "Improvement of the stock as a result of the betterment of the diet has been observed repeatedly in the lower animals and in men. Chinese living under improved nutritive conditions in Hawaii grow taller than people of the same type or strain in China and the growth continues to a greater age than does that of those remaining in China. This average height at twenty years of age was one full inch more than that of the Chinese of the province of Kwantung from which they had come to Hawaii."

Physique Varies With Habitat. Similarly children born of Japanese living in California show definite superiority in height, weight and other characteristics over their parents who had come to California from Japan.

Also children born in the large cities are taller and heavier than a better physique than their parents who came from Europe.

It is common observation in medical schools that the Jewish students in America are taller and heavier than their parents who apply for admission are strictly superior in physical make-up to their parents.

Better food and better living habits can improve the children of natives in any country anywhere.

However, being taller—an inch or more in height—does not always mean being stronger or more able to withstand hardships or ailments, nevertheless it is only true that there is abundant evidence that greater strength and a better physique accompany this increase in height. This was shown recently when of 160 English school children, selected to compete in athletic events, 87 per cent of the winners were above the normal for height and weight and only 6 per cent below normal, and the winners showed a proportion of overweight three times that of the second, third, and also-rans.

Milk Increases Stature. "From Japan a public health bulletin stated that when groups of Tokyo school children were given milk in addition to their regular diet, not only was there a greater increase in weight and height, but these children were more cheerful and happy and showed greater powers in athletics. It did those who were not given this extra supply of milk."

The new best building foods for children are meat, eggs, and milk, but meat and eggs are expensive and not available to some families. However good energy giving and fattening foods can be used generally such as butter, bacon, cereals, bread, sugar with meat or eggs once a day at least and twice if possible.

In addition to this, foods rich in minerals should be eaten daily—cheese, leafy vegetables, fruits, and also foods rich in vitamins—green vegetables—spinach, lettuce, string beans, beet tops; yellow vegetables, tomatoes, oranges, bananas, grapefruit, cabbage, liver.

Besides good food, rest is of vital importance in building up undernourished children. Rest or sleep means that all the body processes are working a little more slowly than when the youngster is up and playing, thus not using up the tissues so quickly.

"In the future those races who will take advantage of newer knowledge of food and their value, will attain a larger stature, greater vigor, increased length of life, and a higher level of living."

Almanac That Saved Life of Columbus Is Exhibited

A book that, according to legend, saved the life of Christopher Columbus has been on view in an exhibition of the library of the late formation of Portugal in Paris, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The exhibition includes 120 items published between 1480 and 1500 by the most important printers of Europe.

Columbus had the Perpetual Almanac of Abraham Zacuto with him on his journey to America. Legend says that at one time the Indians were on the point of killing him. He impressed them by predicting an eclipse of the sun of which he had read in the almanac. They thereupon desisted.

THE FEATHERHEADS

WHAT SAY?

The Tail One—When I say a thing I mean it. I never change my mind.
The Short One—I'm mighty glad to hear it. I remember some mighty interesting things you said about paying back ten dollars you once borrowed.

CRACKS DOWN

"What's a satirical touch, pat?"
It's the fellow who borrows money of you and then kids you about it whenever you meet."

HIGHBROWS

She—Why is it you never mention your ancestors?
He—Because I believe in letting bygones be bygones.

FANS KNOW

"A man ought never to learn to do card tricks."
"If he wins in a card game everybody looks unhappy, and if he doesn't win everybody laughs."

DREAM ON, BOY

"Engaged? Why, he is considerably younger than she is."
"Yes, but he doesn't know it."

MEOW-OW-OW!

Joe Cook is going to make a two-reel film, which is good news for the people who thought he was very funny on the air a couple of years ago.
It's hard to tell in advance how these funny antics will get over when they broadcast. Ed Wynn and Fred Allen are among the few who can go on broadcasting and land in the first ranks when polls are taken. Incidentally, Jack Benny is pretty pleased over having won all the recent radio contests.

MAKING A CHOICE

"He called his mother a wildcat."
"That took some courage."

ODDS AND ENDS

Who'd ever suspect that Pat O'Brien was once a chorus boy in musical shows? ... Now Alice Faye wants "brownness" hair in need of platinum blonde; wants to follow Jean Harlow's example and dramatic parts and figures that change the color of her hair will give her a chance. ... Claudette Colbert has finally decided to do "The Old Maid." ... We're to have "The Price of Glory" as a satire, probably with Clark Gable and Wallace Beery. ... Anthony Adverse is featured at last.

STAR DUST
Movie • Radio

PEOPLE who went to the opening of Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times" in New York are just beginning to recover from the mauling they got on the way in. Nobody who hasn't faced one of the mobs that gathered for these big movie openings can imagine what they're like. Police men try their best to force a way through for ticket holders; they ride their horses up on the sidewalk, to push the crowd back, and it surges forward again. Eddie Cantor never did make it, that opening night, and neither did some of the other celebrities scheduled to attend. The Chaplin picture opened in Hollywood with quite as much excitement as the New York one. But she ducked out before it was over, to avoid being surrounded by enthusiastic friends. Probably felt that she'd rather wait and see what the critics had to say.

Everybody's predicting that Twentieth Century-Fox has the picture that will break all box office records for 1936. It doesn't cost much, as movies go, and there is no great screen star in the cast. But—the Dionne quintuplets are starred, and that's why "The Country Doctor" is going to make money.

Ginger Rogers danced for President Roosevelt before his birthday broadcast, but couldn't do her best because of the snow she was wearing and the fact that the music wasn't quite right. Nevertheless, she liked it.
She was in Washington to attend the birthday bash—she went to sit of them; thus she helped the balls, the picture she's just finished with Fred Astaire, "Follow the Fleet," and the Texas Centennial—she wore the coat of a naval officer's uniform, and she'd recently been named an admiral in the Texas navy. She and her mother were directed by the President before he went on the air, and remained in his study till it was finished. And RKO is very proud of pretty Ginger.

It seems that Ed Wynn had a terrible time trying to find some one to replace Graham McNamee on the new series of Wynn broadcasts. He won't be able to say "Tonight, Graham, the program's going to be different," because Graham works for NBC and doesn't want to leave. So-o-o, they tried out a hundred candidates, and finally John S. Young was lured over to the Columbia to act as stooge for the gurgling Mr. Wynn, each Thursday night from 9:30 to 10:00 over WABC. The Plymouth division of the Chrysler corporation is acting as sponsor.

At the Paramount studios they are so pleased with Harold Lloyd's "The Milky Way" that they want him to sign a new contract right away. But he wants to wait until he sees how the public likes him in it.

Ralph Bellamy—remember him!—has a new five-year contract and is glad to get back to the screen. He's been busy with Charles Farrell, and doing pretty well too; their Raquel club at Palm Springs is a favorite haunt of vacationing movie stars.

Harpooned Hippo Ambushes Boat; Stiff Battle Ensues

Angered because it had been harpooned the day before, a hippopotamus lay in ambush and suddenly attacked a ferry boat operating on the Mpologoma swamp, near Nairobi, Uganda waterway, near Nairobi. Charge after charge was made by the infuriated beast, which nearly boarded the vessel, the water being shallow so that it could obtain a foothold. Six natives, armed with spears, fought the invader until the arrival of a European, who shot it, amid songs and cheers from the deck of another vessel speeding to the rescue.

The Revelation

It isn't the bitter words that hurt. It is the revelation of the heart toward you that generates them.

Find Out

From Your Doctor if the "Pain" Remedy You Take Is Safe. Don't Entrust Your Own or Your Family's Well-Being to Unknown Preparations

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.
We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and year without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.
Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest and most effective for the relief of headaches and all common pains ... and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia. Why Physicians Recommend

SYMBOLS OF PARTIES, POLICIES AND CANDIDATES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ADIES and gentlemen of America! The "greatest show on earth" is about to begin!

No, this announcement hasn't anything to do with P. F. Barum, the Ringling brothers, "Buffalo Bill," Coney or any of the others who have made circus history.

This "greatest show on earth" is the quadrennial drama of a Presidential election.

So... hold your horses, because... The animals in the political zoo are coming!

Watch them as they pass:
There's an elephant with the letters "G. O. P." on its side. That stands for "Grand Old Party," for the elephant is the symbol of the Republican party.

There's a donkey... yes, and a crowing rooster. Both of them are symbols of the Democratic party, although the donkey is the more familiar one.

There's a tiger... ah, a rather subdued one. He's not nearly so fierce as he once was back in the days when his followers completely dominated New York city, had a great deal to say about who was the governor of New York state and exerted a considerable influence in national politics. For the tiger is the symbol of that powerful Democratic organization, Tammany Hall.

There's a camel, the animal that can go a long time without a drink. Naturally, it's the symbol of the "drys" in the Prohibition party.

One animal, however, is missing from the parade and has been missing since 1912. That's the Bull Moose, the symbol of a party which was once powerful enough to send the Republican elephant down to defeat and give to the Democratic donkey the victory which it couldn't win itself. That was back in 1912 when ex-President Theodore Roosevelt led a revolt in the ranks of the Republican party after the nomination of his former friend, William Howard Taft, and formed a new third party, which he called the Progressives.

The crowing rooster symbol, which many Democratic editors run at the head of their newspapers in campaign years and which appears on official ballots in some states, had its origin back in 1840. In that year a certain Joseph Chapman was the Democratic candidate for the Indiana legislature from Hancock county. Things were looking very gloomy for the Democrats that year. The country was still suffering from the panic of 1837 and, of course, the Democratic administration under Van Buren was being blamed for it.

Moreover the "singing Whigs," under the leadership of Gen. William Henry Harrison, the "Hero of Tippecanoe," were developing great strength. In fact, they were so successful in the Hoosier state that George Pattison, editor of the Indianapolis Constitution, a Democratic paper, wrote to a certain William Sebastian of Greenfield as follows:

"I have been informed by a Democrat that in one part of your county 30 Van Buren men have turned for Harrison. Please let me know if such be the fact. I think such a deplorable state of fact cannot exist. If so, I will visit Hancock and address the people relative to the policy of the Democratic party. I have no time to spare, but I will refuse to eat or sleep or rest so long as anything can be done. Do, for heaven's sake, stir up the Democracy. See Chapman, tell him not to do as he did heretofore. He used to create unnecessary alarm; he must grow; we have much to grow over. I will insure this county to give a Democratic majority of 200 votes. Spare no pains."

This letter happened to fall into the hands of the Whigs, who promptly published it in an Indianapolis paper as a polemic against the Democrats. However, it had the opposite effect and "Crow, Chapman, Crow," became the slogan of the Indiana Democrats. When the Indiana Sentinel was launched in 1841 it carried at the top of the front page the picture of a proud rooster and under it the slogan of "Crow, Chapman, Crow." In time this symbol spread all over the country and became the popular emblem of the Democratic party, although the more widely-used symbol by cartoonists is the donkey.

The donkey seems to have first been used in 1837, in that year Andrew Jackson, making his farewell address as he retired from the Presidency, had a great deal to say about the prosperous condition in which he left the country. As a matter of fact, that prosperity was a scare and a delusion. His destruction of the United States bank and the distribution of the treasury surplus had paved the way for a flood of "wild cat" currency which led to wild speculation. Jackson had sowed the wind and Van Buren, his successor, reaped the whirlwind of a severe financial panic.

A contemporary cartoon, bearing the title of "The Mounted Balaam and His Ass," shows Jackson, mounted on a donkey across whose withers hangs a bag labeled "Specie Currency—Circulating Medium." A ghost, labeled "Bankruptcies of 1837" is causing the donkey to balk and its rider is bellowing it with a cone labeled "Veto." Behind them walks Van Buren saying, "I shall tread in the footsteps of my illustrious predecessor."

From that time on during the disputes over the money question the donkey appeared frequently in the cartoons of the day and apparently became recognized as a symbol of the Democrats.

But it remained for a foreign-born cartoonist to make the Democratic donkey so widely known that it has been accepted as the principal Democratic symbol ever since. He also gave us the Republican elephant and the Tammany tiger. That man was Thomas Nast, perhaps the greatest cartoonist this country has ever known. Drawing for Harper's Weekly during the Civil war his pictures, which stirred the patriotic blood of the North and sent hundreds of young men to join the colors, had made him known throughout the country and President Lincoln was said to have declared once that Nast's cartoons were "the best recruiting sergeants on the side of the Union."

After the Civil war Nast cartoons came into even greater fame as he turned his attention to the heated politics of the times. The great contest at that time was between President Johnson and Edwin M. Stanton, the secretary of war, whom Johnson was trying to remove from office. Nast was strongly anti-Johnson and pro-Stanton. When Stanton died, just after his elevation to the Supreme court bench by President Grant, the bitter feelings of the Johnson-Stanton feud had by no means died down and southern Democratic papers attacked Stanton even in their obituary notices. On January 15, 1870, Nast drew his first donkey cartoon. It pictured Stanton as a dead lion kicked by a donkey labeled "Copperhead papers." Underneath were the lines: "A live Jackson kicking a dead lion and such a lion! and such a Jackson!"

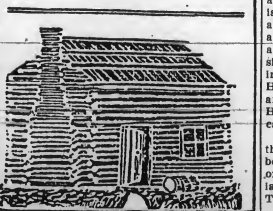

Nast did not immediately repeat the donkey symbol. He had others for the Democratic party, the serpent in some cases and the fox in others.

Nast's invention of the elephant as a symbol of the Republican party came about in a half affectionate jab at his own political party. In 1874 the Republicans faced their first defeat since coming into power in 1860. It was not a Presidential year but in New York Samuel J. Tilden, fighting against the Republican governor, John A. Dix, was making a double-edged fight for that office. Tilden appealed to all classes of voters, for he had been a prosecutor of Tweed and he was also a member of the reformed Tammany Hall. The strength of the Democrats lay not in any local issue or in the power of their candidate. There was a national issue at stake, whether or not a President of the United States should have a third term. President Grant was believed to be determined to run for President again in 1876. The principal opponent to the idea was James Gordon Bennett's New York Herald, which shrieked incessantly "Caesarism!" At this crucial moment Nast drew his cartoon showing the first Republican elephant. It was called "The Third Term Panic." The New York Herald, an ass dressed in a lion's skin labeled "Caesarism," is braying loudly and all of the animals in the forest are fleeing in alarm. The Tribune is shown as a giraffe, the World as an owl dropping an arithmetic book, the Times as a unicorn with a monocle. At the edge of an abyss, the strength of the Democrats planks marked "Infidelity," "Reputation," "Reform" (Tammany) and "Reconstruction," is a huge elephant marked "Republican Vote." Nearby is a half-concealed fox with features suggesting Tilden's and labeled "Democratic Party."

Two weeks afterwards Nast drew a sequel to that cartoon. It showed the elephant tumbling down into the pit with the rotten planks and the revolting animals following, and it was called "Caught in a Trap—The Result of the Third Term Hoax." From that time on the elephant was used repeatedly the symbol of the Republican party in the Nast cartoons. But it was not until 1880 that he showed the donkey and the elephant together definitely marked Republican party and Democratic party. In this cartoon the elephant lay asleep before the White House while the donkey was jumping over a low iron financial chaos, despite the efforts of Senator Bayard to pull it back by the tail as he exclaims, "Hold on, and you may walk over the sluggish animal upon this year's budget."

Other cartoonists were quick to adopt Nast's symbolism and for the last 50 years the Republican elephant, the Democratic donkey and the Tammany tiger have been commonly-accepted members of our national political zoo. But these animals have not been the only party symbols.

The use of symbols as graphic portrayals of beliefs, political creeds, moral issues and economic policies began early in our history. One of the earliest was the "black cockade" which the Federalists wore in their hats in 1798 to distinguish them from, and as a rebuke to, the Republicans (the forerunners of the modern Democrats) who were wearing the tricolor of France as evidence of their sympathy for the new republic across the Atlantic.

When Andrew Jackson was the Democratic candidate for President, his partisans revived his popular nickname, "Old Hickory," gained during the Indian wars and the War of 1812, and made the hickory their symbol. They carried hickory canes in imitation of the one which Jackson always carried. They held tumultuous rallies around hickory poles set up on the village green, town common or public square or set one up on a wagon which headed their campaign procession. In these processions marched Democrats carrying hickory houghs and companies of "Hickory Buds," little boys in jumpers, white underclothes and broad white collars and little girls in white dresses with blue and red sashes. Perhaps the most famous campaign in which a symbol played an important part was the "Log Cabin and Hard Cider" campaign of 1840. A Democratic newspaper had repeated a sneering remark that had been made about the Whig candidate, Gen. William Henry Harrison, the "Hero of Tippecanoe." It said: "Give him a harrel of hard cider and a pension of two thousand a year, and our word for it, he will sit the remainder of his days in a log cabin by the side of a barrel of cider and a coon skin on his wall of a sea cool and study moral philosophy."

The Whigs joyously accepted the symbols thus suggested. Everywhere the voters turned, they saw a log cabin with a barrel of cider in front of the door and a coon skin tacked on its walls or a live coon perched on the roof. There were log cabin badges, watch charms, earrings, medals, handkerchiefs, shaving soap, etc., and wash-women advertised that they would "do up gentlemen's shirts in log cabin style." The result of this, plus the songs and slogans in praise of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too," was the overwhelming victory of Harrison, the Indian fighter and frontiersman, over Martin Van Buren, the "aristocratic" New Yorker, who was the Democratic candidate.

In this campaign, too, appeared the predecessor of the "full dinner pail" symbol of later campaigns. It appeared in the form of the slogan of the Whigs: "Van's Policy, Fifty Cents a Day and French Soup; Our Policy, Two Dollars a Day and Roast Beef."

Closely akin to the appeal of the log cabin in 1840 was the symbolism of the 1880 campaign when fence rails were the emblems of the Republicans who had nominated Abraham Lincoln, the Illinois rail-splitter, for the Presidency. Similarly, the fact that Ulysses S. Grant had once engaged in the lowly occupation of a tanner, was used in his behalf when he was a candidate for President in 1868. "Tanner clubs," bearing symbols emblematic of the trade, marched in his honor shouting, "Bring on the enemy and we'll tan his hide!" In these parades also appeared men wearing shaggy and obviously untanned fur coats.

In fact, one of the most remarkable things about the symbolism of a Presidential campaign is the number of times some form of wearing apparel has been an important element in the appeal to the voters. The fringed hunting shirt and leggings of the frontiersman worn by men signing "The Hunters of Kentucky," were much in evidence during the campaign to elect "Old Hickory" Jackson. A coon skin cap, fashioned after the favorite beard of "Old Tippecanoe," Harrison, was worn by every loyal Whig in the campaign of 1840.

When Horace Greeley was the candidate of the Democrats in 1872 his followers wore white beaver hats in imitation of the favorite headdress of the famous New York editor. In the Cleveland campaign of 1888 his running mate, Senator Thurman, gave his supporters a colorful emblem—the red bandanna handkerchief. Thurman was the last senator to use the snuff box and he was famous for the grand gesture with which he swept his red bandanna out of his pocket after taking snuff. So Democratic men wore suits and women wore dresses made of red bandanna. Theodore Roosevelt's Rough Rider had undoubtedly helped elect Mr. President and last but not least in campaign badges was Al Smith's famous brown derby, even though it became the symbol of a defeated candidate.

Fire Damages Are Greater Than Flood Losses in U. S.

As a generalization, greater loss is caused by fire than by flood in this country. In 1933, fire losses amounted to $316,807,733; loss by floods, $35,322,410. In 1934, fire losses amounted to $275,652,000; floods, $5,500,000.

While fire losses are constantly high from year to year, the losses by flood vary greatly, being high only in certain years, when disastrous floods occur.

Barrels Hid Noted Papers; Queen's Tears Damp Stains

When Grant Duff visited the Register house at Edinburgh in 1862 he was shown a number of valuable and important state documents, including the list made by Mary Queen of Scots of her jewels, and was told that this with many other valuable papers, had been taken to London in the time of Cromwell "and not sent back to Edinburgh till recent times. These valuable papers were packed in horse heads and suffered much from the damp."

Joseph Robertson, the greatest of Scottish antiquaries of the period, had a good story about Mary's list of jewels which was one of the documents that suffered from the damp. He declared that Miss Strickland mistook the damp stains for the queen's tears and wrote a pathetic little passage accordingly.—Manchester Guardian.

Joseph Robertson, the greatest of Scottish antiquaries of the period, had a good story about Mary's list of jewels which was one of the documents that suffered from the damp. He declared that Miss Strickland mistook the damp stains for the queen's tears and wrote a pathetic little passage accordingly.—Manchester Guardian.

In Loving Memory

Miss Gertrude Baker.
One year since we laid you away.
We miss you coming to our home,
We miss you by night and by day.
We miss you taking walks and rooms
That bright October day.
You were carried in my arms,
Suffering on a bed you lay.
Till God bid you come.
To us glad to have you come,
Did you come to stay.
March 4th, God called you home.
March 16th, we followed you away.
The day you have paid for.
You are happy on the other shore.
By your side I'll soon be laid.
On earth I'll see you no more.
Brothers and sisters we are nine,
Nine we are no more.
So lonely is this home of mine,
So many have gone on before.
The debt they have paid.
Your souls are at rest.
We know where their bodies were laid.
God knows best.

Mr. & Mrs. W. T. Stewart

AN INTERESTING TALK

On Brazil by Missionary, At the Methodist Church, Last Thursday Evening

Those who failed to attend the talk on Brazil by Dr. D. L. Betts, Methodist Missionary, at the Walton Methodist church last Thursday night, missed a very interesting description of that far away country. The Doctor is a very interesting speaker, with genial, pleasant delivery. He is a native of South Carolina, and has been a missionary in Brazil for ten years. He displayed many pictures of the natives, which are an intermixture of Negroes and Latins, the latter being mostly Portuguese, and there is no class distinction. The population is like most of the inhabitants of Latin countries, slow and easy-going, and avoiding as much work as possible as the climate is very oppressive. The country contains valuable timber, among which is red wood, from which dye is made, also other resources, including gold mines. The natives talk mostly with their fingers. Their language is mostly Portuguese (mongrel Spanish). The country is very damp and consequently insect life is very prolific, more especially mosquitoes, from which screens are ineffective, and the only protection from these pests is a salve rubbed on the exposed parts of the anatomy. Of the principal religions, Presbyterianism comes first, Baptist second and Methodist third, although nominally the prevailing religion is Catholic, as in all Latin countries are. And, notwithstanding the climate and insects, Dr. Betts says he likes it.

Ben H. Riley, County Attorney, Passed Away At His Home In Union

Wednesday Evening After a Long Siege of Illness

Buried With Military Honors By Boone Post American Legion

Late Wednesday evening, Benjamin H. Riley, age 46, County Attorney of Boone county, died at his home in Union, after a long illness which included paralysis.

He served four terms as County Attorney. He was also vice president of the Union Deposit Bank, a valued member of Boone Post American Legion, a member of Union Masonic Lodge and the Modern Woodmen of the World. He is survived by his widow Mrs. Alma Riley, a son Benjamin A. Riley, and his mother Mrs. Carrie Taylor Riley.

Mr. Riley was a man well liked by a large circle of friends, of a genial, sunny disposition, his friends were legion. His popularity was evidenced by being elected County Attorney of Boone county for such a long period. As a public official he was faithful and diligent and discharged his duties conscientiously.

His funeral took place Saturday afternoon at 2:30 fast time, from the Episcopal Lutheran church near Florence, he being a member of that church. As an evidence of his popularity, a vast assemblage of many friends congregated at the church, many being unable to gain admittance. Rev. Harold Beemon, preached a most appropriate sermon, paying just tribute to this good man, after which the remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

Many of the legal fraternity of this judicial district were present to do honor to his memory, among which was Judge J. G. Vallandigham of Oregon, Ky.; Circuit Court Judge; Commonwealth Attorney Ward Yager of Warsaw, Ky.; Judge Sidney Gaines, ex-Circuit Court Judge, and Attorney John L. Vest of Walton, and the Boone county officials.

Funeral Director Philip Tallaferrero of Erlanger, had charge of the arrangements.

Ben H. Riley was born in Kenton county, and was in his 46th year. He prepared himself for law and was admitted to the bar and began the practice of his chosen profession in Burlington with Edgar C. Riley, a cousin, March 17, 1919. He was appointed as County Attorney by Judge N. E. Richey, who was County Attorney but had been appointed County Judge, and assuming that office, his office of County Attorney became vacant, hence the appointment of Mr. Riley, who has since that date been County Attorney, having been elected continuously since that date. He was an efficient public servant and will not be an easy matter to select one to fill his place, as he was well versed in the law, and an outstanding citizen. He was married to Alma Blankenbecker and to that union one child was born, a son Ben A. as he is familiarly called. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Harold Beemon, assisted by Rev. Roy Johnson pastor of the Big Bone Baptist church, and Chaplain of Boone Post No. 4 American Legion, of which he was one of the organizers. The church service was attended by a large crowd of friends and relatives, which more than filled the seating capacity of the church. At the grave, the American Legion had charge of the closing ceremonies, with members of the army with which he served, together with a firing squad from Ft. Thomas, Ky., together with taps sounded with the bugle. To the writer the presentation of the flag of the United States to the son, was the most impressive. "Ben A." as he is called, aged seven, accepted the flag with tears in his eyes, carrying it to his mother. Taps, after the firing squad, was very pathetic. It was the last rites for mortal man to perform for one "Buddy" who has answered the last call and is at rest with the Creator of us all. Good bye Ben, but not forgotten, and we hope to meet across the river from which no traveler returns. The active pallbearers were John L. Vest, Walton; Ward Yager, Warsaw; A. B. Renner and N. E. Riddell, Burlington; Leslie Barlow and Arch Bousie, Union. All County officials were honorary pallbearers. The Court House and all officials, Peoples Deposit Bank, Burlington, and Union Deposit Bank, Union, were closed at noon Saturday, March 7th, in respect of Mr. Riley, and during the funeral. County Judge N. E. Riddell ordered that the flag be closed at noon and that the flag be placed at half mast. Ben Riley will be remembered by those who knew and were in contact with him, as a man well versed in the law and at all times he was a well liked citizen. His home life was ideal and the advertiser extends to his wife, son and mother sympathy, which we realize in no wise will repay for the loss of a husband, father and son. A successor will have to accept the responsibilities of the deceased in his public office and whoever he may be we sincerely hope that he will to his best efforts serve the people of our county as has the deceased.

NEW FLORENCE METHODIST CHURCH

Ground Is to Be Broken Saturday, March 21, Preparatory to Building New Edifice

On Saturday afternoon, March 21, at 4 o'clock, fast time, ground will be broken on the lot where the new Florence Methodist church, Florence, Ky., is to be built, at a cost of $8,000. The church is to be of brick and an architect's picture of same appeared in the Advertiser last month. Rev. Waldrup, pastor of the Scott Street Methodist church, Covington, will be present to participate in the ceremonies.

ERROR IN NAME

In last week's Advertiser, in mentioning the burial of Mrs. Richard Riley, colored, of Big Bone, who was buried from the Zion Colored Baptist church, Walton, Tuesday afternoon, the name given the Advertiser was Mrs. William Hughes, and we did not learn until after the paper was printed that the name should have been Mrs. Richard Riley. How the name was confused with Hughes is more than we can surmise. Otherwise the other features of the funeral were correct. She was the daughter of Jeff Dunson of Big Bone.

It is now able to be on her feet a little at a time. She can use her limbs now and can bear all her weight on her feet and use them well.

A box social was held at the Walton Methodist church Tuesday night which was greatly enjoyed by those in attendance.

A PRACTICAL HOAXSTER

By THAYER WALDO

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

STANDING just inside the entrance of Hotel Christie—Place d'Hotel de Claret—Garrison carefully scanned the scene. It was, he saw, a gala occasion—this opening of Hollywood's most novel play spot.

There, enclosed by a ring of supper tables, countless couples in costume costumes skinned over a gleaming floor of ice, while blizzards came from an orchestra's one end.

Watching the skaters, Garrison at last focused on a girl in scarlet sweater and skirt.

Earlier, it was her partner he studied, for the girl was indeed rare enough. Myra Drexel, indeed ranked as one of Zenith's most promising young actresses, and Garrison for some time had felt a keen professional interest in helping her to reach stardom.

The man with her was tall and gracefully slender, though somewhat past youth.

"There was about his bearing an almost intangible touch of distinction."

Seeing the captain of waiters, Garrison called him over and asked: "Alphonse, just who is that chap skating with Miss Drexel?"

"Oh, that," Alphonse replied, "is the Baron Siegfried von Fleemann. He arrived from Munich today, I believe."

The publicity man's eyes narrowed.

"I see; thanks. By the way, which is Miss Drexel's table?"

The man pointed it out.

Garrison followed a low-backed figure in one of the two chairs, and smiled.

So Steve Cranford was second billing again!

That, he knew, wouldn't suit the lad's jealous temper, nor would the plan Garrison now had. However, that was just too bad.

He stroled over, clasped the blond man's shoulder, and said amiably:

"Hi, fella—how goes it?"

The other's response was a mere grunt.

Garrison grinned and sat down.

"Sure," he conceded, "I can imagine you're burned, but that'll have to be business before pleasure."

The hoaxster stared at him coldly.

"Meaning exactly what?"

"Well, are you aware who that bird hoofing Myra around happens to be?"

"No," Steve growled, "and I don't give a tling-diddle-dee. The big gigolo!"

"Listen, you egg: snap out of it and look at this thing seriously. That man is a genuine baron from Germany, no less. Now, everyone here must know it, including the newspaper crowd. Think of the write-ups they'll do if Myra and the Baron are together all evening and he takes her home!"

Steve's scowl was a venomous thing.

"Look here, Louis," he began, keeping his teeth together; "I'm not going to fall in with any of your cockeyed schemes, so—"

"Wait a minute, son," Garrison cut in easily; "loving Myra, don't you want her to have a career, don't you? Well, no one in this town ever reached the top without plenty of build-up in print, and here's your chance to help the girl get some. With her talent, that's all she needs now. How about it?"

For an instant the boy did not reply.

Then he looked at Garrison and asked: "What do you want me to do?"

"Duck out of here. Then when the Baron brings her back, he'll either have to stay at this table or ask her to his. I'll take care of the rest."

Steve showed a bleak, one-sided smile and stood up.

"All right," he said tersely; "I'll play it your way. But that doesn't mean I have to like it."

As he stalked away, the music came to an end.

Hurriedly Garrison rose and went in the opposite direction.

Twenty yards away he took a vacant chair and waited.

Couples were gliding off the rink now—in a moment he discerned Myra Drexel and the Baron approaching.

Reaching her table, they paused and the girl glanced around perplexedly.

Then, with an apologetic little shrug, she said something to the man.

He bowed amiably and pulled out her chair. Myra accepted it, and Baron Siegfried von Fleemann seated himself across from her.

The publicity man indulged a grin of thorough satisfaction.

On the room's other side sat a group of men and women from several of the city's papers, and Garrison knew they couldn't miss seeing the couple.

That would make press notice a certainty.

But one item remained to be arranged.

Unobtrusively he stole away toward a door which gave into the hotel proper.

Five minutes' searching found sewing room floor where he screamed louder than ever.

He remembered one idea was to have pants from the nursery.

She jerked George up sharply by one arm and spanked him as he stood clutching his breath for a frosty night.

"Why, you're terrible, George! I never saw him act so."

And over Marbeth's protests she snatched the baby up and carried him across to the nursery, closing the door with finality.

The screams and choking gasps did not diminish in the slightest; George's sobbing "No-no-no-no-no-no!"

It was 3 a. m. and Marbeth by the dressing table lamp was just finishing Jim-Jum's nappies.

Dressed at the little chalk of wills across the hall she had, at last basted Jim-Jum's ear back in place and at the risk of Mrs. Peabody's disapproval carried the elephant in to George.

As she expected, the baby stopped crying at once and received Jim-Jum with open arms.

But Mrs. Peabody frowned.

"I hate to let him get the upper hand—so young."

"Still, it was a relief to have him quiet."

"It's really better to work around them, when they're so little."

After his dinner George had gone to sleep with Jim-Jum still in his arms.

"But Marbeth's going to make him that new coat tomorrow," his mother warned him, "and you mustn't cry."

Marbeth had seen George's hold on the elephant tighter; but that was all right. She knew there would be no more scenes tomorrow.

For midnight, as was the house was quiet and George in a sound sleep, Marbeth stole into the nursery and cautiously drew the elephant out of the baby's relaxed arms.

Back in her own room hurriedly and competently she laid the old pieces for a pattern on the new cloth, cut them out, and since she dared not use the sewing machine, set herself to the long, tedious task of back stitching and felling the seams by hand.

The clock downstairs chimed three.

But Jim-Jum was done at last and a smart, swank beast he was!

Still benign, still benevolent, but with a well-tanned elephant-gray hide, firm legs (Marbeth had reinforced them with skewers) and a gorgeous, ornate, red and orange howdah blanket where ladies might ride.

She crept down the hall back into the nursery and seated Jim-Jum on his haunches atop a fold of blanket with the tip of his new trunk touching George's outstretched palm.

His pleased cry of surprise wakened Marbeth in the morning out of her heavy first slumber.

She heard him with a satisfaction that was followed by a sharp twinge of something like jealousy.

For it was his mother he was calling—"Ma-ma! Jim-Jum! Jim-Jum!"

London Smart Set Dances

In "The Morgue" Resort

"The Morgue" is the name of London's popular night club, says a United Press correspondent.

In an atmosphere of coffin, tombstones, skulls, skulls and "things that go bump in the night," the smart folk dance until the small hours of the morning.

The correct thing for visitors to do is to toast the skulls and compose a humorous epitaph for one of the tombstones.

On the ground floor of the club is a pleasantly lit room called "Sereneth Heaven," with the usual tiny dance floor and bored jazz bands that can be seen in any night club anywhere. In the dark corner is a dimly lit staircase that leads down to "The Morgue."

As the timid visitor descends he is greeted with a wall from some hidden area that would put any self-respecting ghost to shame.

On every wall of the long eerie room are painted graves and tombstones, each one headed "R. I. P." Degenerat proclaims the merits or demerits of "the old toper" alleged to be buried beneath.

Ruins of churches, with bats flying from the walls, and gruesome pictures of bodies torn from their graves and lying naked on stone slabs—the work of one of the younger and modern school of artists, it is said—form the "mural" decoration.

A score of black coffins with imitation brass handles and fittings painted on their sides are the tables at which the guests sit. A museum of human bones with wreaths of evergreen is at the far end. It bears a plate to the effect that some aged Londoner "who had once refused a drink" lies buried below.

And on a square of polished floor, beneath imitation cobwebs and grinning skulls, society dances until dawn to music relayed from "Sereneth Heaven."

Purkinje's Figures

In optics Purkinje's figures are figures produced on a wall of uniform color when a person enters a dark room with a candle moving it up and down approximately on a level with the eyes. From the eye near the candle an image of the retinal vessels will appear projected on the wall.

The Terebo

A terebo is a shipworm, one of certain peculiar marine mollusks belonging to the same class as the oyster, which burrow in submerged wood and are very destructive to piles of wharves and to wooden ships. Their bodies are long and wormlike because of the great development of the united siphons, which are protected by a calcareous tube, the valves of the shell and the foot being very small. Two small calcareous plates, known as pallets, are borne on the siphons. The best known and most destructive species is Terebo navalis, found in most parts of the world.

Hopper Poison Is Ready for Battle

Government Has Supply on Hand and Infested States Are Supplied.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

A new mixture of grasshopper poison that carries 50 per cent sawdust, a lower concentration as a result of last year's poisoning campaign, and a surplus of poison bait that drought ridden farmers did not use last year—all these factors indicate that the United States Department of Agriculture will need to buy very little bran and other bait materials in 1935.

Dr. N. Arnold of the bureau of entomology and plant quarantine, who directed the first intensive grasshopper campaign financed with federal funds, says part of the surplus has been realized and is being moved into states that otherwise might run short of bait.

If the existing supplies of bait are not sufficient for the demands this year, Dr. Arnold says, the department will buy bran sawdust, and sodium arsenite and ship them into selected centers where the material will be mixed by hand under strict supervision. This bait costs much less than the factory-mixed bran, molasses, and arsenite used last year, and, according to the results of field tests the past season, is just as effective in killing two-year-olds.

Last year the department started with a poison mixture containing 25 per cent sawdust, but found by trial that a mixture with 50 per cent sawdust is satisfactory. Although the number of grasshopper eggs laid last fall was far below the number laid the year before, Dr. Arnold says, there are enough in the ground to start another heavy infestation this summer, unless the weather at hatching time is unfavorable to hopper development.

Rape Pasture Believed Immune to Chinch Bugs

There is a particular place for rape, in the garden, as a pasture this year, believe members of the Iowa State college farm experiment station.

Rape sown alone is unquestionably the best summer pasture that can be seeded for hogs, and best alone or with oats and the rape for sheep, they say.

On average soil an acre may be expected to produce sufficient pasture for 20 to 25 spring pigs. The crop is planted early in the spring, using about five pounds of seed per acre. The supply of seed is adequate and low. An acre may be seeded for between 25 and 30 cents. This is the lowest cost pasture that can be seeded and returns are greater than can be expected from anything else, the farm experiment station asserts. They believe there is this year a place for rape on practically every farm in the state, it having an excellent value for all kinds of live stock except milk cows.

Examine the Clover

Red clover cut for hay in 1934 and left over for 1935 may prove to be a serious disappointment, warn agronomists at Purdue university. They say that very often root rots are present when clover is left for the third year, which will destroy the crop. Farmers are advised to watch their clover fields fully in the early part of the growing season. If plants begin to wither and the stand starts to thin out, it will be advisable to plow up the clover and seed to soy beans or some other crop. If the clover keeps right on growing, with no sign of injury, the crop should be saved.

Pigs Need Copper, Iron

Milk is deficient in copper and iron, and when pigs are fed nothing but milk, they do not get a sufficient amount of these constituents to maintain the normal hemoglobin content of their blood. Then they lose their vigor, become anemic, inactive and listless, and are very likely to be trampled and crushed by the sow. Some forms of so-called "thrums" in young pigs, which some years ago was supposed to be caused by lack of exercise, are also the result of lack of iron and copper in the milk of the sow.

Treat Ewes for Worms

Before the ewes go to summer pasture they should all be treated for worms. Give them a clean start and it is safer to treat them regular all summer. When the lambs are three months old they should be treated if there are any parasites on their range. As soon as practical after shearing thoroughly clip both lambs and ewes. Machine shearing will get most of the ticks off the ewes but they will infest the lambs and stunt their growth.—Missouri Farmer.

Butter Fat Averages

A herd average above 80 pounds butterfat per cow is generally recognized by dairymen to be profitable under usual farm conditions and an average above 400 pounds butterfat is considered exceptional. The average of all cows in the United States today is near 100 pounds butterfat per cow.

Silo Good Place for Winter Hays

Most Legumes Excellent for Dairy Cows When Handled Right.

By W. F. Nevin, Associate Chief in Dairy Cattle Feeding, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Since hay mows are already being put up with their silos, it is applicable to be pressed into the silage service of farmstead storage space for much of the additional hay crops being raised this year.

Contrary to the popular opinion, most legume hays make excellent silage for dairy cows if handled in the right way. Alfalfa, soybeans and the various clovers, all of which are in abundance in the state this year, can be made into palatable, nutritious ensilage. The only difficulty with legumes as silage is that they develop a strong, unpleasant odor and become unpalatable if put into the silo too green. This is caused by deterioration of the large amount of protein in such crops. This condition not only reduces the feeding value of the silage but also is likely to taint the milk, since the odor will permeate the entire barn. Some of the taint also is carried to the milk from the silage by the cows.

Allowing the legume hay to wilt and dry out after it is cut will help prevent the unpleasant odor and taste. The surest method of preventing the development of these disagreeable qualities, however, is to mix fairly green corn with the legumes half-and-half by weight or less than one load of green corn to two loads of legumes. The additional eight in the corn causes an acid to form that prevents deterioration of the protein and the development of the bad taste and smell.

Another method which may be used where green corn is not available is to mix black strap or sugar beet molasses with the hay at the rate of 1 to 2 per cent, or 20 to 40 pounds to the ton.

Use Cull Sweet Potatoes

As Feed for Dairy Cows

Unmarketable sweet potatoes may be fed to dairy cattle with excellent results, says R. H. Ruffner, head of the animal husbandry department at North Carolina State college.

Both the tubers and the vines make a good palatable feed which will produce milk and butter of high quality. But live stock men can afford to feed only cull potatoes or those which cannot be marketed for human consumption at a fairly good price, Ruffner pointed out.

Sweet potatoes contain about one-fourth of the total value of an equal weight of corn. Consequently, dairymen cannot afford to allow more than one-fourth the price of corn for the sweet potatoes.

Sweet potatoes may be fed cows in place of corn silage. Since there are 25 pounds of digestible nutrients in 100 pounds of potatoes, while an equal weight of silage contains only 17 pounds, the cows will not need as much potato feed as silage.

When sweet potatoes are fed, the cows should also get eight to ten pounds of legume hay to balance the ration, as potatoes consist mostly of starch and sugar, Ruffner stated.

Canal Banks Used as Roads
In some sections of lower Egypt, near Cairo, the wide banks of canals over two thousand years old are used as automobile roads.

CALCIUM NEEDED
IN DAILY MENUGrowing Boys and Girls
Require It Regularly.

By EDITH M. BARBER

DO YOU know how to check your daily diet for its calcium content? It is essential that you have a liberal supply, and even more important that the children of the family get what they need.

Growing boys and girls need from three to four times as much calcium in proportion to their weight as do adults. Calcium is responsible, although not entirely, for producing good bones and teeth. It helps to regulate the way our blood flows and clots. Nowadays before a tooth operation, it is customary to test the blood for its clotting properties. If these are not satisfactory, calcium salts are given the prospective patient.

The food which is most liberally supplied with calcium is milk, of course. Includes cheese, one of the most important milk products. Ice cream will also contribute some. Some vegetables and fruits provide it in less liberal amounts. Cauliflower, figs, dried beans, celery, string beans, cabbage, carrots, spinach, oranges, potatoes, eggs, whole wheat and bran contribute worthwhile amounts.

A child who gets a quart of milk a day will not suffer from a calcium shortage.

Dairymen Not to Have More Cows

Milk Production Expected to Increase Due to Better Feed Conditions.

Supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture—WNU Service.
There will be no marked increase in number of milk cows on farms over the next two years, but milk production is expected to increase in response to better feed conditions, according to the annual outlook report of the bureau of agricultural economics.

Stocks of dairy products are reported larger than a year ago, and with prospects for increased production during the late winter, the total supply of dairy products will be larger than a year ago.
Farm prices of butterfat are reported higher now in relation to feed grains than a year ago, and further increase is in prospect. Farm prices of butterfat are low in relation to meat animals and are likely to continue relatively low during 1936, says the report.

This price relationship will tend to check dairy production in areas where shifts are most easily made from dairy to meat production.
Receipts of milk and cream in the United States in 1935, according to the report of the bureau of agricultural economics, were 22,294,000,000 pounds of milk and 1,100,000,000 pounds of cream. The report adds, butter prices will probably rise in relation to other commodities.

The number of milk cows increased steadily from early 1928 until the spring of 1934 when drought and the general shortage of feed caused a decline. On January 1, 1935, there were 22,294,000 milk cows, and a year later there were 26,185,000. On January 1, 1935, there were 25,100,000, and in January, 1936, there will be about 21,500,000.

The bureau's dairy correspondents all over the country report farmers are planning to increase their dairy herds, but actual increases during the next year or two seem likely to be small.

The growth of population during the next year or two, it is expected, will be proportionately greater than the increase in number of milk cows. This will tend to make conditions slightly more favorable for dairying.

See Soy Bean Progress

in Various Industries

Moving about these days, it is impossible to avoid the soy bean, even if one wants to. In the home we saw car parts being stamped out of soy bean meal; also we were served soy bean muffins. Last summer we attended a picnic where baked soy bean cakes were served. Good, too, notes a writer in Country Home.

"The vegetable soys we grew in our own garden were a decided success from the standpoint of edibility and resistance to the Mexican bean beetle. They came along later than ordinary string beans, and have to be shelled like lima, but the family liked the flavor. Undoubtedly they can be improved by breeding to make them earlier and heavier yielding."

Nearly 5,500,000 acres of soy beans were planted in the United States in 1935 for harvesting, almost a third more than in 1934. The consumption of soy beans oil for paints, soaps, vegetable shortening, linoleum and clothing, glue and printing inks, to name but a few uses, is increasing. In all, more than 300 widely assorted uses for the soy bean have been found. Supply may temporarily run ahead of demand, but the future of this lucrative legume, the acreage of which in 30 years has increased a hundredfold, seems boundless.

Proper Cream Test

The dairy division of the University of Minnesota advises that the most desirable test of cream produced by farmers for sale to creameries is between 35 and 40 per cent of butterfat. Cream containing this amount of butterfat possesses higher keeping qualities, requires less space or fewer cans in transportation, results in a larger proportion of skim-milk remaining on the farm, and can be handled much more economically in the manufacturing plant. Low test cream contains a relatively large amount of skim milk. So when a farmer sells this cream, testing around 25 per cent fat, he practically gives away many valuable food constituents.

Wrapping Butter

Farmers who market their own butter will find cellulose wrapping entirely satisfactory, according to recent tests at the University of Wisconsin. The cellulose wrapping does not impart surface flavor with foreign odors; it is air-tight so no additional covering is necessary. Because it is transparent, it adds the appearance of the package and may serve as a chandising aid. Butter wrapped in cellulose in the Wisconsin tests shrank only 88 one-hundredths per cent.

New Haven School Notes

We have made into history another basketball tournament. Although only two teams could win the tourney seemed to be enjoyed by all those concerned. We desire to express our appreciation to those who contributed in any way. Close games, a good distribution of representation brought a good following to each session. The general good feeling among the teams and those in charge of them added to the general atmosphere. The officials were efficient and well received. We cannot praise too highly the cooperation given by our pupils, teachers, parent teachers association, janitor, and all the way to the most casual spectator.

Florence girls took home with them the runner-up trophy and Hebron girls the winner.
Walton boys, runner-up, and Hamilton made history for its community by taking the big sundial trophy bearing the statue of a passer.
We hope both Walton and Hamilton do well in the region.
New Haven boys dropped their first game to Florence after a good first quarter. Our girls reversed two season results by defeating Hamilton, only to be noised out by Hebron, the tourney winners.
An all-tournament team of ten girls and ten boys received gold basketballs. These selected on the teams were: Girls—Deliah Dolwick and Frances Siskman, Hebron; Virginia and Margie Miller, Hamilton; Dorothy Judge and Lila Robinson, New Haven; Thelma Simpson Walton; Betsy Editha, Burlington; Margie Pickett and Margie Cottenham, Florence. Boys—Melvin Moore William Ayler and Herbert Doolin Hamilton; Alvin Clore, Burlington; Ralph Coggage, New Haven; Samuel Shunkle, Hebron; Robert Scott, Florence; Morris Arnold, Jean DeLooney and Homer Osborne, Walton.

CHIC FOR MATRON

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

In the fabric realm silk sheers are at the top of the list. The handsome pure silk sheers are exactly what the stylish matron is should be looking for. In that it drapes, sheers and pleats without bulkiness and are therefore extremely flattering to the stout figure. The very attractive matron here pictured wears her afternoon gown of deep green velvet silk sheer with that confident air which the best dressed always carry. Ingenious hair-dressing and draping draw the skirt into a pleasing one-side effect. The cowl neck demonstrates the excellent draping qualities of the silk sheer to perfection. Three jeweled clip ornaments the neckline. The milk coat is in keeping with the exquisite taste displayed in this costume.

Lord Byron Bob Is Latest

Made for English Women
The "Byronic Bob," named after the lady-killer author of "Don Juan," is the latest thing in English women's hair styles.

A modified version of the "Eton Crop," it features a long, luxuriant lock at the front, which is waved to fall negligently across the brow at the side and over the crown in a manner which the Nineteenth century girls found irresistible in Lord Byron.
Although the hair is still short close at the back of the head and the nape of the neck, it is no longer so considerably styled to carry the short effect to the sides of the head. The whole style is more girlish in that the way lock prevents the hair from appearing which the "Eton Crop" gave to even pretty faces.

Farmer Killed On Highway 42

Tom Hood Fatally Injured Monday Morning In Upper Gallatin Co. Near School House

Monday morning about 7 o'clock Tom Hood, age 80 years, a well known farmer of upper Gallatin county, was struck by a Louisville, Ky. automobile and fatally injured.

He was taken to his home nearby where he lingered until that night when he died. The driver of the car stated that he tried to avoid striking the man but owing to the darkness he was unable to do so.

Mr. Hood's poor eyesight and his feeble condition he either did not see the auto or was unable to get out of the highway quick enough. The driver of the car was exonerated. About a year ago Mr. Hood consistently injured.

Mr. Hood is survived by his widow and three children. He was an excellent gentleman and had many friends who greatly deplore his death.

His funeral took place from Hughes Chapel, Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, the pastor Rev. C. B. Rayburn, preaching an appropriate funeral discourse to a large assemblage of relatives and friends, after which the remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

It looks as though John "Pie" Montjoy, the Negro in Covington, Ky., jail, sentenced to hang for a criminal assault on a white woman, will live to old age. His case was appealed from Kenton Circuit Court to Kentucky Court of Appeals, which sustained the verdict. A lot of fanatics have now secured a stay of execution on April 2nd, from the State Court of Appeals, to carry the case to the United States Court of Appeals, on the ground that there were no Negroes on the jury that sentenced him to die.

On these grounds if the defendant was an Irishman, and there was no Irishman on the jury, could the case be appealed?

Wallace and Berry Williams of near Rioledge, Kenton county, were welcome visitors to the Advertiser office, Monday.

Boone County had their first Leaders Training Class on "Personality of the House," March 3rd, at the home of Mrs. J. P. Clegg. Miss Ida Hagman, Specialist in Home Improvement, of the Extension Department, College of Agriculture, University of Ky., gave the lesson.

The afternoon session of the April Training Class to be held in the Court House at Burlington, will be open to any one interested in improving their home.

The seven clubs and their officers are: Burlington, president, Mrs. Helen S. Kelly, vice president, Mrs. O. S. Edkins, and secy-treas, Mrs. Howard S. Ryle; Florence, president, Mrs. Joe J. Bernhardt, vice president, Mrs. Clifford Coyne, and secy-treas, Mrs. Floyd Roberts; Grant, president, Mrs. R. S. Hensley, vice pres. Mrs. C. E. Rogers, and secy-treas, Mrs. C. E. McGee; New Haven, president, Mrs. Jake Clegg, vice president, Mrs. Marie Ferguson, and secy-treas, Mrs. Marie Ferguson; Petersburg, president, Mrs. J. H. Hulse, vice president, Mrs. Bernhardt, and secy-treas, Miss Gladys Klopp; Verona, president, Mrs. Mable Mae Hamilton, vice pres. Mrs. O. K. Powers, and secy-treas, Miss Allan Harris; North Walton, president, Mrs. John L. Vest, vice pres. Mrs. J. C. Bedinger, and secy-treas, Mrs. John A. Stephenson.

Members of Homemakers Clubs in Boone County are making plans to have "Clean Up" campaigns in their local communities. Many yards and lawns can be greatly improved by removing trash, dead rose vines and hedge and then whitewashing around buildings. The women want Boone to be noted for its neat and attractive yards.

N. R. Elliott of the Extension Department, College of Agriculture, says that roses should be pruned to 4 or 5 inches from the ground, and hedge rows pruned to 2 or 3 inches from the earth before March 20th.

Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Stephens of High street, arrived home Sunday after a protracted visit to Mrs. Stephens' relatives, the Kentons, near Georgetown, Ky.

Crittenden Girl Dies Suddenly

Teacher Succumbs Sunday Morning In Upper Gallatin Co. Near School House

Miss Mildred Matthews, age 23, teacher of social science at the Crittenden High School, for several years died suddenly at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Oaten following a short illness of cerebral hemorrhage with which she was stricken last Wednesday while at supper at the Oaten home, where she boarded.

She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Matthews of Crittenden. She was active in religious circles and was a Sunday school teacher and pianist at the Crittenden Baptist church. She was also a leader of the Girls' Reserve and a graduate of Georgetown College.

The remains were held at the Oaten home until Tuesday, and brief funeral services were held at a Crittenden Springs church, after which the remains were taken to Crittenden where services were held at the Crittenden Baptist church, after which interment was at Hill Crest Cemetery, near Dry Ridge, Ky.

DR. R. W. COCHRAN DIES

Carrollton Physician Succumbs At Winter Home In Florida

Funeral services were held Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. at the Carrollton Christian Church for Dr. R. W. Cochran, 83, who died Saturday at his winter home in Sarasota, Fla.

Dr. Cochran was a native of Carroll county, but had practiced in Madison, Ind., and in Florida. He was a brother-in-law of J. Lyter Donaldson, former chairman of the State Health Department. He leaves his widow, two sons and one sister.

Mrs. Belle Hutsell of Walton Star Route, writes us that she and her sister Mrs. M. L. Frazer of Greenville, Ky., who have been enjoying a stay in Florida, returned to Greenville, Monday. Mrs. Hutsell says she had a wonderful time in the "Land of Sunshine" while they were shivering in the frigid weather here.

She is one of Boone county's finest ladies and her many friends are pleased to

AT LAST we have a picture made in color that we can cheer about. It is "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," and it is so beautiful that from now on we may expect many more pictures which give us natural coloring instead of black and white. It is the first all-color picture made outdoors. Sylvia Sydney, Fred Murray and Henry Fonda are the excellent performers, and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" is one of the pictures that you really must see.

Do you by any chance remember "Common Clay," as Constance Bennett made it some years ago, or perhaps you recall it as a silent picture with Clara Kimball Young as leading lady. Well, it's always been popular, so plans were made to do it again, but the Hays office vetoed the story!

All of the girls seem to want the role of "Queen Elizabeth" in the film version of "Mary of Scotland," in which Katharine Hepburn will play "Mary." Bette Davis would like to play it. Several others have made tests. And the other day some one who was introduced as Lady Lindsey appeared at the studios all set to show what she could do as the famous queen. But when she spoke the joke fell through, for Lady Lindsey was our old friend Ginger Rogers.

Just in case you're thinking of trying to break into the movies by getting work as an extra, here are some facts that may make you pause and consider—that is, unless you have money enough to live on. "Almost all extras are engaged through the Central Casting corporation, which is maintained by the producers. And the average (50,000 of them) during 1935 was $5. That is, each of them worked an average of one day a month. Of course, there were many who made more than that. The highest salary per day was $15. Most of the extras fell into the class that receives from $7.50 to $10 a day. Yet the advice "stay away from Hollywood" unless you have enough money to live on" makes little mark on would-be screen stars—for the daily number of people wanting to register, in 1935, was 87.

Ken Maynard, hero of Westerns, has bought himself a circus. He already had a Wild West show, and he's going to put the two together, and may tour with them. Well, Tom Mix did pretty well with a circus, though he did nothing but ride around the ring and wave his hat. I think Maynard will give us more of a performance than that.

Claudette Colbert has put her foot down, once and for all; she will not play one of the leads in the "Old Maid," no matter how long she has to wait for another role. Departing for the desert for two weeks' location work on "Under Two Flags," she announced before leaving that she left that she was doing Paramount a favor in turning the part down, because it was unsuited to her. And she's been making pictures long enough to know pretty well what she can do.

Not even Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times" aroused more interest before it was released than has the Fox picture, "The Country Doctor," made with our famous quack. Even Hollywood's harshest boiled-milk folk can hardly wait for it.

ODDS AND ENDS... Chester Morris worked for one day as an extra in "Romance and Jealousy"... Katharine Hepburn used to live in a house that she said was haunted—but Boris Karloff has it now, and not a ghost has appeared; maybe they're afraid of him!... Joan Bennett's youngest daughter, Melinda, is one of the cutest children in Hollywood... Virginia Bruce has a new house... Myrna Loy is an enthusiastic knitter... Carole Lombard's picture appears with her in "Love Before Breakfast"... And Carole will appear with a Swedish dialect in some scenes of "The Princess Comes Across."

Lespedeza Likely to Be Market Hay

Ranks With Good Alfalfa in Feeding Value; Should Be Cut Early.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture—WMS Service.

Farmers who grow Lespedeza believe they have an opportunity to establish it as a high quality market hay—if they keep it free from weeds, cut it at the right time and cure it properly. They base their belief on the low production of other market hays—timothy and clover, alfalfa and prairie hay—for the last two years.

Last year's hay crop was 24 percent less than the short crop of 1933 and 32 percent below the five year average, according to the 1934 annual crop report of the United States Department of Agriculture, which said: "Through... caused heavy losses of alfalfa and clover and timothy averages as well as very low yields per acre. Yields of wild hay were very low."

The southeastern states, where Lespedeza has become established only in the past few years, mostly for seed and pasture purposes, never have produced hay for the market because of a shortage of good haying weather and lack of a hay that will cure in a few days. In fact, most high quality hay—timothy, alfalfa—has been shipped in by delivery.

The annual Lespedeza crop, usually, they are ready with five days if cut early, and there is little waste. Those who have fed good Lespedeza hay report it ranks with good alfalfa hay in feeding value. Lespedeza hay, to be of the best quality, is cut while in bloom or not later than when the seed is in the soft dough stage. It may be cut at any time when it is tall enough to make a good hay crop. High prices have caused much of the Lespedeza to be harvested for a good crop. The hay remaining is of poor quality and not to be compared to the best quality hay—timothy and clover—cured properly. Lespedeza does not lose much feeding value, even when rained upon, but it does lose the prime green color demanded for a prime market hay.

DOUBLE-

GEORGIE BLAKE stood before his dresser mirror adjusting a lemon colored tie adorned with red spots that matched his red hair.

George was in a deep reverie brought on by the summer weather; the young people's lawn party, and Miss Mabel Porter.

George was preparing early to escort Mabel to the lawn party that afternoon, when a penetrating call from below stairs punctured his reverie.

"George!"

"Yes, Ma?" He pulled his tie, not yet fully conscious of his surroundings.

"Your Aunt Cora just phoned and I told her you'd take care of the twins this afternoon. You'd better go right over and get them."

The beaming expression on George's face disappeared instantly and was replaced by one of latent horror.

He dashed out to the stairs head, "But, hey, Ma, what about the lawn party?" he called anxiously.

"Geewhile I can't miss that! Good night!"

"You can take the twins with you," his mother answered from the kitchen.

"What?"

George raced down the stairs.

"Hey, Ma, I can't take those kids to the lawn party. Geewhile, wouldn't I look swell draggin' those brats around?"

"Bertie and Bertha are not brats, George Blake," his mother said sharply. "They're your first cousins, and you should be more respectful."

"Yes'm," George agreed meekly.

He mooched into the front hall and picked up the telephone.

The lawn party was out.

Why, if he appeared at that festa with Bertie and Bertha there would be an instant riot with the guests leaving immediately by the most accessible exits.

People do not remain in the presence of those five-year-old terror any longer than necessary.

George dialed a number while he stood knee deep in the ashes of his ruined day.

"Hello?" The musical voice belonged to Miss Mabel Porter.

"Hello, Mabel. I'm calling to brighten up a sudden lull. I just called you up to ask if you wouldn't like to go on a picnic this afternoon."

"Picnic?" Mabel sounded puzzled.

"What for?"

"Well, I don't think the old lawn party will amount to much," George said. "Hostiles."

"Hostiles?"

"I have to take care of the twins and I was thimbley."

"Not those terrible twins, George?"

"Uh-huh," George moaned. He could feel the air on the wire grow chilly.

"Well, really, George," Mabel said at last, "I ought to go to the lawn party about leaving and everything. Kerdy Hoyt wants me to go with him, so I guess I'd better."

"All right," George said, "but I hope he gets stonemason poison!"

George put down the telephone.

Bertie and Bertha were the last bitter drop in George's brimming chalice.

Ferdie was the son of Blaise's leading banker and citizen, and since his return from school for the summer months had been cutting in on George's time with Mabel.

Is it any wonder that George was blind to the sunshine and the birds as he set out to collect his charges?

Bertie and Bertha behaved properly until three o'clock in the afternoon and they escaped into their air.

George set out in search of them with a dire warning from his mother ringing in his ears that if he did not find them by five o'clock he'd have to pay for it out of his own pocket.

Twenty minutes later he found Bertie and Bertha in Judge Blinn's front yard.

They were seated in the Judge's hot-beds yanking tulip blooms up by the roots.

George clung to the fence for support at the sight of this destruction of horticultural prizes.

There was a familiar sign on the fence. "Beware of the Dog!"

Luke Long, ace photographer for City News Service, at the cocktail bar.

Garrison greeted him and queried: "Where's your dash outfit?"

Long indicated a black case and a tripod at the counter's end.

"Well, grab 'em," the publicity man instructed. "and come along with me. We're going to get a pretty little picture for page one on all the afternoon rags."

Together they left the bar and headed for the Palais de Glace. At its entrance Garrison halted long.

They had a clear view of Myra and her Baron.

"They're the ones I'm after," the publicity man said, pointing: "and give that lens of yours a polish. I want this to be good."

Long set to work deftly.

In fifteen seconds the camera was ready on its tripod.

He handed Garrison a loaded powder-trough, took a quick-sight, and announced: "All ready—let 'er go."

As Garrison prepared to touch the flash of a violent jolt from behind sent him spinning from his band.

Recovering balance, he saw a tall, thin, female figure in solid glaucous gown heading straight toward Myra's table.

Then, before he could move, she had planted herself in front of the Baron and launched a shrill tirade.

"You powder-trough buffoon!" she cried, waving a vehement finger in his face; "why you should be coming here to cut up footleches, huh? Maybe you tell your own lady friend that you was a big shot, jay vet, you run along home and put on that puttin' out-fourth before I cut you a snick in the shins!"

The man's face had gone slowly crimson.

His jaw worked spasmodically, but only guttural Germanic sounds resulted.

Suddenly the woman seized both his shoulders and began to shake them violently.

People were quickly gathering around.

With an anguished moan Myra sprang up and started to rush her way through them. Then out of the mob, behind Steve, came a man in a dark suit.

Clutching him and buried her face on his shoulder.

"Oh, Steve!" she murmured tearfully. "It's so awful. Why did you run out, my boy, and leave me with that fake?"

The girl chuckled as he led her away.

As I recall it, during the answer given, the man who was the first leaving but we won't worry about that now.

They went out through the lobby and waited a moment while the doorman called a cab.

As it drew to the curb, a figure emerged from a door near them and started to waddle hastily away.

Steve called: "Good night, Kate—and thanks!"

Myra shrank closer to him, gasping.

"Why, it's that horrible wife of the man who pretended to be a Baron!"

The taxi door was open. Plopping her hat, Steve followed and took his seat before replying.

"My dear," he said, smiling into the girl's perturbed, wondering face, "that particular phase of the cable's existence is at an end. I was sure that in the excitement you wouldn't recognize Candy Kate, the woman who has that little stand on the corner. But say—can you really read it?"

Steve said that for me for only five dollars, and the same agent gets Garbo five thousand!"

Paris Has Oversupply of Museums Nobody Visits

"Paris has more museums than any other city in the world, but most of them are never required to disclose their treasures. Everybody knows about the Louvre, the Cluny, the Luxembourg and the Carthusian, but the Paris correspondent of the Observer of London says there are hundreds of others to which hardly anyone ever goes at all.

"Private collectors bequeath their treasures to the state or the municipality, or else to the Institute de France, together with the house in which they lived, which is to become the museum. A curator is appointed, these small curatorships having become a recognized sort of pension for the literary man. The house is open at regular hours, but nobody ever thinks of visiting it.

Who, for instance, knows the Musee d'Emery, the rather inferior collection of Chinese and Japanese works of art, brought together by a play-thing, who made a fortune out of melodramas and left by him to his country, together with a house in the Avenue Foch, the best address in Paris?

"Who has ever been inside the Musee Gustave Moreau, the house of that indifferent Nineteenth century painter, which he made a public legacy on condition that his works—and the gallery contains nothing else—should be shown?"

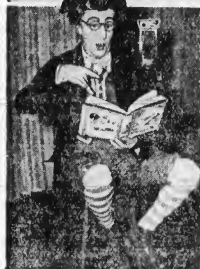

"Who could even find the way to the Musee Henner, another house of a painter, fruit of his paintings?"

"There are galleries of more permanent artistic interest than these, such as the Musee Grévin and the Musee Jacquemart-Andre, but they are too dispersed."

Roughage Reduces
Dairy Feed Costs

Large Supply of Legume Hay and Silage Will Be of Much Value.

By John Arey, Extension Dairymen, North Carolina State College-WXII Service.

An adequate supply of good roughage is recommended for decreasing the cost of feeding dairy cows and increasing their milk and cream production.

Cows fed liberally on roughage such as lespedeza, alfalfa, clover and soy bean silage will give a good milk flow with only a limited amount of grain in their ration.

To insure a sufficient supply of roughage for the summer and winter, dairymen should plan to produce enough hay and silage to give each animal all it needs.

About one and a half tons of legume hay and three tons of silage should be provided for each average cow during the winter. If no silage is available, the amount of legume hay should be increased to two and a half tons.

A combination of silage and hay is preferable to hay alone since the silage furnishes a succulent ration which is needed in winter. Also, a large quantity of silage can be produced on a small acreage. One acre of good corn or sorghum will supply enough silage to feed three cows six months.

The trench silo is so inexpensive and valuable that no farmer owning as many as four mature cows can afford to be without one. With such a silo, the farmer can store away an abundant supply of silage for the winter with comparatively little expense.

Farm Home Needs Shown by Recent Investigation

Outstanding needs of the farm home, as indicated by 17,881 cases investigated by the department of agricultural extension of Purdue university, are principally sewerage, paint and screening, according to a report received by the Federal Housing Administration.

Of the farms investigated, the following percentage table was formulated: 35 per cent were found to be in need of a safe method of sewage disposal; 55 per cent were in need of new paint; 41 per cent required more adequate screening; 31 per cent, miscellaneous repairs and replacements; 28 per cent, foundation repairs; 25 per cent, more closet space; 14 per cent, kitchen sinks.

The purposes of the Purdue investigation were to promote sound and attractive building and protect the farm home from unnecessary depreciation; to develop conditions which promote health and comfort; the provision of conveniences which will end needless discomfort and encourage a suitable setting for the farm home.

Millett Fodder, Alfalfa

Millet is more nutritious than prairie or timothy hay, but feeding millet hay alone might produce increased jaundice and lameness, so it must be used along with other roughage and feeds.

Good corn fodder, free from mold, has a little more feed value than timothy hay, but it is different. The first has a low arch, the second a medium, and the third a high. Since they've been arch-curve fitted they can keep both feet on the ground with perfect comfort.

Short Furrows

Lespedeza reseeds itself so that the crop will remain from year to year, once a good stand is obtained.

An acre of good clover or alfalfa pasture should supply enough grazing for about 20 pigs and save about $30 in feed bills.

A 21 per cent improvement on Arizona ranges over 1934 has been reported by the agricultural statistician stationed in Phoenix.

Farm income from cotton and grain is expected to average this year about twice as much as in 1932.

Although timothy has had one "bloom," a single timothy flower may be yellow or pink at two o'clock in the morning, purple at eight o'clock and gray when it is bleached by rain or dew.

Renting Equipped Farms

The usual terms on which fully equipped farms are rented are a 50-50 division of income and expense. This type of lease is known as the 50-50 live stock share lease. The landlord furnishes the farm and one-half of the productive live stock. He pays the taxes, insurance, and upkeep of the buildings. The tenant furnishes the work stock and machinery and the one-half of the productive live stock. The operating expense and the operating income are shared equally. Such modifications of this plan may be made to cover special conditions on individual farms. —George A. Pond, division of Agricultural Economics, University of Minnesota.

France Forming Solid Front Against Germany in New Crisis—Paraguay Made Totalitarian State—Chester Davis Is Sent to Europe.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union

M. Flaminio

SIXTY thousand German troops in the Rhineland that was supposed to be demilitarized. Practically the entire French army in and behind the vast system of fortifications along France's eastern frontier. The French government, backed by the other signers of the violated Locarno treaty and by the little Entente cordie, Russia, demanded that Germany withdraw her troops from the Rhineland or that nations, economic and possibly military, imposed by the League of Nations. Great Britain trying hard to keep peace, reproving Germany, supporting the French, and in great measure, but urging that Hitler's proposal of new non-aggression pacts be given consideration. Reichsführer Hitler reviewing his forces in the recuperative territory and receiving the loud plaudits of the inhabitants for restoring their military sovereignty.

That in a nutshell was the serious situation in Europe as the representatives of the Locarno nations and the council of the league assembled in London to consider what to do next. Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin of France was there with the full support of Premier Sarraut for his demands that immediate action be taken to bring Hitler to time. He was represented as "almost convinced" that a "preventive war" now would be preferable to "parade two years hence."

In France it was disclosed that France counted on having at her disposal, from her own forces and those of Russia, Poland and the little Entente, a potential army of about 40,000,000 men. It was said 8,000,000 could be mobilized in 48 hours and 31,000,000 were trained reserves; and that 8,000 airplanes and a million tons of warships were ready.

The Franco-Russian treaty came up in the French senate and was ratified by a huge majority. It was this pact that Hitler gave as his excuse for remilitarizing the Rhineland, asserting that it was a violation of the Locarno treaty, being aimed at Germany. It is the final link in the "iron ring" around the Reich which France has been forging.

At first the British government's response to France's demands for full support against Germany was ambiguous and not satisfactory to Sarraut and Flandin. After conferences with Prime Minister Baldwin and other ministers, Capt. Anthony Eden, the young foreign secretary, appeared before the house of commons and declared any attack on France or Belgium in violation of the Locarno treaty would compel Britain to go to their assistance. He added, however, that there was no reason to suppose the present German action implied a threat of hostilities. Then he indicated Britain was willing to consider Hitler's proposals for new peace conventions.

The British statement seemed to calm the crisis that there was reason to believe they knew in advance what Hitler intended to do. When Flandin and the other Locarno signatory representatives arrived in London, the attitude of the British cabinet changed and grew decidedly stiffer.

HITLER was not represented at either the Locarno conference or the session of the league council in London. He himself, having precipitated the crisis, made his triumphant appearance in the Rhineland and then awaited events. His dramatic and sudden denunciation of the Locarno treaty was accomplished in a speech before the Reichstag in formal announcements to the ambassadors in Berlin of the nations concerned. He asserted that the troops he sent into the Rhineland comprised "symbolic" army only, and that the Reich, while ready to defend itself, was wholly desirous of peace. To prove this he offered the plan which includes: A demilitarized strip of German, French and Belgian land; a 25-year non-aggression treaty among Germany, France and Belgium; with Great Britain and Italy as guarantors; inclusion of the Netherlands in the system of pacts; an air pact with the western powers; a non-aggression pact with Germany's eastern neighbors, including Lithuania; and return of Germany to the League of Nations.

after her equality is established and her sovereignty restored. France's reply to this was that, having just violated one treaty, Hitler could not be trusted to observe another; and anyway, France would not even listen to the Reichsführer's new proposals until he had withdrawn his troops from the Rhineland. The French army was moved toward the frontier and the "Magnein line" of fortifications and underground passages was full manned. This system of defenses has been criticized because it requires on one side, a strong army is rendered insecure for the other—what has been called in Paris "the concrete army." Remaining forces would be insufficient for offensive movements, and this fault might be disregarded if France gets the expected millions of soldiers from her allies.

CHESTER C. DAVIS, head of the invalidated AAA, is not going to administer the soil conservation program devised as a substitute. Secretary Roosevelt announced that Mr. Davis would lead the expedition to Europe to make a special study for the government of economic conditions bearing on the agricultural plans for this country. Critics of the administration immediately assumed that Mr. Davis and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace had disagreed and that the former was being sent abroad to "take the picture." This Mr. Wallace warmly denied, asserting there had been no friction and that he had deep affection for Mr. Davis.

In announcing the assignment, Mr. Roosevelt said: "In requesting him to make this study for our government, Secretary Wallace and I have had in mind the distinguished service Mr. Davis has given American agriculture, especially during the last two and one-half years. As administrator he has been directing governmental efforts which, to a considerable degree, were made necessary by changes in the European outlets for American farm products."

Information was obtained by him at close hand as to the precise nature and extent of these economic changes abroad is expected to greatly aid in developing American farm programs.

COL. RAFAEL FRANCO, who became provisional president of Paraguay after the recent revolution there, has set up a government modeled after Italian Fascism. He issued a decree which declared the state and the "liberating revolution" as indivisible and banned for one year political, labor, or other union activities not emanate explicitly from the state. Paraguay, the government asserted, will be purged of "endemic, democratic, industrial, and sectarian evils." The official statement places in the "liberating army" the principal source of authority.

The aims of the new government, the decree said, will be the construction of a new state of Paraguay and constitutional reorganization for a future republic.

CHIEF JUSTICE ALFRED A. WHEAT of the District of Columbia Supreme court checked the telegram-izing activities of the Black senate committee on lobbying. He granted the Chief Justice of the United States an injunction restraining the Western Union Telegraph company from giving the committee copies of the firm's telegrams.

The judge said the subpoena served on the telegraph company by the committee, calling for copies of telegrams "going way beyond" the committee's powers. Next day William Randolph Hearst, newspaper publisher, began a fight in court to keep an original confidential source of the hands of the Black committee. EARL BEATTY, commander of the British war fleet in 1918-19 and afterward first lord of the admiralty, died in London after a long illness at the age of sixty-five. Rising from a sick-bed to attend the funeral of Earl Jellicoe last November, he died in the hospital. He would soon follow his colleague, Lord Beatty had a meteoric career as a naval commander and displayed the same boldness and courage in the Heligoland light and Dogger Bank and especially in the battle of Jutland where he commanded the first battle cruiser squadron. His wife, who died in 1932, was the first daughter of the Chicago merchant prince, Marshall Field.

GREAT Britain is interested in Edward VIII may abandon his state of bachelorhood and take unto himself a wife. This was revealed when the king authorized these lines in the news columns of the civil list to the house of commons: "His majesty desires that the continuance of his marriage should be taken into account so that, in that event, there should be a provision for her majesty."

Five princesses of Europe are considered most eligible to become Edward's bride. They are: Irene and Catherine of Greece (whose ancestry is Danish), Juliana of the Netherlands, Euzela of Greece, and Kyril of Russia, daughter of Grand Duke Cyril of Russia who is a pretender to the Russian throne.

Communists and radicals who appear in the ranks of the Workers' Alliance of America went before WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins and made a series of demands that were all coldly turned down by that gentleman. These included the dismissal of Victor P. Riddle, New York WPA director; no cut in the 3,500,000 men on welfare relief, and full union pay and union hours for relief on relief and pay for sick leave. They also demanded that all employed, whether or not on relief rolls, be given WPA work.

IN RECENT financing operations the government sold $1,355,543, 550 in bonds and notes, according to Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. The offerings, largest since the Victory bond issue of 1919, were heavily oversubscribed by banks. This borrowing brings the public debt up to the record figure of $31,413,000,000. The treasury's cash balance is increased to $2,750,000,000.

The funds will finance New Deal spending in the near future, partially defray bonus costs and retire $450,000,000 worth of treasury bills falling due March 10.

KOKI HIROTA, former foreign minister, formed a new ministry for Japan and submitted the names to the emperor. He, besides taking the premiership, takes the foreign minister's portfolio. Lieut. Gen. Count Koki Hirota, 57, is put in as minister of war and Admiral Aoki as minister of navy. Military leaders insisted that Hirota, labor union leader, proper recognition of the gravity of the times and the necessity for renovation of Japanese foreign policy, and to this demand he has agreed.

Hirota issued a statement saying that "the present empire situation requires independent and positive requirements of our foreign relations in order to liquidate this emergency."

Hachiro Arita, new Japanese ambassador to China, told the press in Shanghai that "it is fundamental that China recognizes the fact that the present empire situation requires independent and positive requirements of our foreign relations in order to liquidate this emergency."

POWERS of the federal trade commission to investigate unfair trade practices will be greatly broadened by the Wheeler bill approved by the senate interstate commerce committee. It is vigorously opposed by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Newspaper Publishers' association. The measure would:

Make "deceptive acts and practices in commerce" unlawful in so far as they "interfere with or tend to interfere with" competition specified in existing law. Expressly give the commission authority to proceed on its own initiative, "without the aid of the president, or either house of congress as now provided."

Include persons and partnerships as well as corporations within the scope of the commission's authority to investigate business practices and conditions in interstate and foreign commerce. Redefine "documentary evidence" to include "books of account, financial and corporate records," and make such records subject to commission subpoena.

LEUT. ROBERT K. GIOVANNOLI of Lexington, Ky., hero of a spectacular bombing plane crash during army maneuvers at Dayton, Ohio, last October, was killed in a crash of his army plane at Logan Field, Baltimore. GIOVANNOLI's right wing coming out of a glide and hurtled down in a crazy spin from an altitude of less than 100 feet. It rolled over after hitting the landing field and was demolished.

DIABOLICAL present congress has authorized the spending of more than a billion dollars for national defense. So far the legislators have shown little disposition to be stingy in this line. The war department bill, carrying $245,220,000, passed the house and is pending in the senate. Hearings on the $549,501,290 navy bill have been completed by a subcommittee and the measure is being drafted. These sums are record breakers for peace time.

Maybe Peace, After All Building in a Big Way A Level-Headed King One Stride Method

The real war news from Europe is that England has refused France's request for immediate assistance against Germany's armies from the Rhineland. England has refused to go to France's aid, but it is not in the language of the day, to "stick their necks out."

France appeals to all members of the League of Nations in a bid for "peace." But, with England holding back, other signers of the Locarno pact are not inclined, in the language of the day, to "stick their necks out."

The United States is doing and spending in a big way. The Public Works administration says more than $1,000,000,000 worth of projects have been completed. It is estimated that 200,000,000 of other work still under construction. Twelve hundred miles have been spent for materials, all involving labor; $20,000,000 for wage payrolls, by PWA, organized labor presents a building program of $500,000,000 to occupy the idle building trades.

If money holds out, and the inflation bonds keep their value, this will be remembered as the building age.

A level-headed young man is the new English king. After seeing the new king Cumnor named for his other, walking seven miles up and down in it, he visited the slums of Glasgow, called the worst and "reddest" in England. Some other "wretched" city councilors refused to be present to him. "That's perfectly all right," said the king, "I'll come all right and have tea with them instead." This he did. Two thousand ship workers cheered and called him "Good Old King."

The king, who visited individual tenements, knocking at the doors, patting babies on the head, keeps up with the times. No English king did that before.

There are different ways of handling strikes, depending on public officials. At Akron, Ohio, a strike of milk drivers disturbs consuming families and producing farmers. Herman E. Werner, public prosecutor, says coldly: "Anyone who interferes with milk deliveries will face guns, and the order will be 'Shoot to kill.'"

How many millions would be killed, gassed, bombed, ripped to pieces by atomic and machine-gun fire before Hitler or the nation back of him could be persuaded that he is not a reincarnation of Frederick the Great, or Napoleon?

This is a murderous war, and it will be deliberate. No grand duke heir to an imperial throne has been murdered to supply the spark.

The Department of Commerce cannot explain the Arkansas air crash, on January 14, that killed 17. It says some passenger "was incapacitated the pilot or interfered with controls."

The local sheriff says somebody inside the plane fired a kind of pistol. But marks were found. Let air passengers beware of barking pigs before the electric device that reveals instantly a pistol or any other metal object. No decent passenger would object. Guns and knives might be "perked" on entering a plane.

Japan is the question mark in the war situation, but Japan would not deliberately antagonize all her customers and friends in western Europe by striking at Russia, in a war interesting to all of them.

It is probable that, in the time, as in the last war, would send "observers," thoughtful and alert, to watch the white races cutting each other's throats.

Mrs. Akeley, who used to help her husband hunt lions and gorillas before he died, has been in Africa on her own account and reports that in Southeast Africa natives cling to their old ways and methods; nothing will change them.

The chief who is sick wants a witch doctor to come back and tell him that he has been bewitched into swallowing a small crocodile, which is biting his insides.

The treasury finds that in the first eight months of this fiscal year it has accumulated a deficit of $2,410,000,000. The country's total income is $30,000,000,000. In prosperous times the country's total income is $40,000,000,000. When will those "times" come back?

Washington. — President Roosevelt has very neatly called the bluff of his critics.

Hot Potato for Congress. The real war news from Europe is that England has refused France's request for immediate assistance against Germany's armies from the Rhineland. England has refused to go to France's aid, but it is not in the language of the day, to "stick their necks out."

It was the greatest tax bill ever submitted in peace time. Whether the proposals the President has made are economically sound or whether they are a political expedient will do the job he expects of them, of course, remains to be seen. But the fact cannot be dodged that the President has significantly settled down around the ears of those who have constantly challenged the waste inherent in his war reform and recovery program with a strident, one-sided demand upon congress that it vote new taxes.

It is a most interesting situation, politically. In nearly a score of years of Washington experience, I cannot recall having seen so much squirming and wriggling as well as fretting and mulling among representatives and senators. It is only natural that they do not wish to go into a campaign for re-election when there is the certainty that here, there and everywhere they will be confronted with heckling as they vote for new taxes—assuming they will vote tentatively heavy levies as the President has suggested, and as congress is inclined to do.

They have no heart for a tax increase at this time. But, to repeat, they are faced with a situation in which they must either vote for new and heavier taxes or else they will be forced to swallow many long-winded speeches in condemnation of the President's course.

Whatever the merits of the Roosevelt proposals may be, there is no doubt that they are a course open to him in the general move to support these new levies, all of the howling and shouting and tumult about a reduction in taxes, which has become just so much holy-war.

Opponents may differ with the President as to the details of his tax plan but the situation he has created compels them that they stand with him. To otherwise would be not only inconsistent but rather dumb.

Frank Kent, the able news commentator, summarized one phase of this situation the other day by saying: "It makes no difference that the situation which compels the imposition of new and heavy taxes is largely a Roosevelt's fault. And it makes no difference that the move is forced by the exigencies of his campaign for re-election and is designed to spike the most damaging levies against him that he has piled the debt mountain high and by terrific expenditures menaced the national solvency. All that counts is that the Republicans, and his non-political critics, who have been assailing Mr. Roosevelt for months because of his failure to balance the budget to either obstruct or hold back now that the President urges congress to provide by taxation the money to pay for the vast gifts it has voted would be beyond the limit in political sincerity and hypocrisy."

In other words, there is no alternative for opponents of the President's policies. They must show their sincerity by going through with the levying of new taxes. I do not mean by that statement that it is necessary for them to accept without argument the charge against him that he has piled the debt mountain high and by terrific expenditures menaced the national solvency. All that counts is that the Republicans, and his non-political critics, who have been assailing Mr. Roosevelt for months because of his failure to balance the budget to either obstruct or hold back now that the President urges congress to provide by taxation the money to pay for the vast gifts it has voted would be beyond the limit in political sincerity and hypocrisy."

On the other hand, it seems to be the consensus among Washington observers that the President's High Court might not be away with one suggestion which he made in submitting his tax proposals to congress. He said that the necessity for these new taxes arose from the Supreme court decision invalidating the processing taxes upon which the Agricultural Adjustment administration and its subsidies to agriculture was predicated. Of course, that may be true at the moment, but, as one frequently hears pointed out in Washington conversation, the President's bounties to farmers and the AAA itself as one of his key-levies are unconstitutional and cannot be said to be the fault of the Supreme court, yet that was the implication in the President's message.

Likewise, the President blinted that a part of the taxes was due to congressional action in passing the bonus, which he vetoed and congress made operative over his veto. Again, I hear it questioned that congress is actually to blame. It is being said with great frequency that Mr. Roosevelt made the fight against payment of the bonus this year that he did a year ago, it is almost inconceivable that congress would have passed it over his veto.

It is being said in this connection that if Mr. Roosevelt really had desired to kill the cash payment of the bonus, his stalwart leaders in the house, the senate could hardly have afforded to refuse his request to veto against it. Instead of that situation, the record shows that such recognized spokesman as Senator Robinson, Arkansas, the Democratic leader in the senate, Senator Harrison of Mississippi, Senator Byrnes of South Carolina, and Senator Clifford of Maryland, a personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt, all voted to pass the bonus over the President's veto. I may not be thoroughly acquainted with the history of politicians, but I cannot believe the men would have turned their backs on the President in the bonus fight unless they entertained a feeling that he did not seriously object.

So it simmers down that the men who a year ago and two years ago voted the President's tax proposals, less power and less funds to deal with an emergency are now compelled to stick by, vote the taxes and take it on the chin if that is to be the reaction from the voters. After all, it is merely the taxpayers who are the goats and as usual the taxpayers have not great voice in their own defense. As to the President's tax proposals, the congress is asked to levy an unprecedented type of tax on undistributed corporation profits. New processing taxes to replace those outlived by the Supreme court are being designed by the President, and a tax which the President described as a "windfall" tax to recover a considerable part of the old processing taxes returned to taxpayers was suggested. He asked also that levies be laid on dividends which are now exempt from normal tax on individual income.

The "windfall" tax is designed to offset the action of the Supreme court which ordered the return of the processing taxes as having been levied in coercion. In other words, the administration is attempting to get by one method what the Supreme court said it did not get in the manner it employed.

The tax on undistributed profits of corporations is the center of all kinds of controversy already. Opposed to the tax are the capitalists, if the government forces corporations to pay taxes on reserve funds they have laid aside for the proverbial rainy day, such as we have experienced for the last six years, none of them can stand the gain of another depression. Mr. Roosevelt contended that his tax proposal is designed to take care of the way approximately one-third of such reserves, was designed only to prevent the piling up of cash by corporations instead of distribution of those funds to stockholders.

There will be much bailing and filling, much charges and counter-charges, much maneuvering and manipulation as congress moves over the new tax bills. It will pass some kind of new taxes and citizens will begin early next year to pay off the deficits of the reform and recovery program.

Some 75 years ago, the government organized mail service to inland points with the Star Route. Mail Service, calling the Star Route. This service has been continued in operation in scores of communities and it is continuing to operate exactly on the same basis as it did three-quarters of a century ago. So, this is a plea in behalf of the Star Route mail on the Star routes and for better service for Star route patrons.

There is a bill in congress now which proposes to provide better service for the Star routes and for patrons of those routes.

There is more to be got out of the world than there has been in the whole history of the world. There is more to see, more to enjoy, more to ponder over, more that is interesting and amusing.

I often think how excited Benjamin Franklin would be if he could come back to the earth and see the vast electrical development that followed his discovery of the lightning bolt and how he would have been amazed at the billions of dollars' worth of productive machinery.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

There used to be in my school reader an old story of General Washington's a Self-counter with a Importance non-commissioned soldier watching a squad of private soldiers at work. He was a little fussy man, a seat on a stone fence and calling out orders to the soldiers.

It was needed to get the road repaired as soon as possible for troops were soon to pass that way. If the road was not in shape to be used safely by the artillery and cavalry the patriots might lose the opportunity to meet the enemy at the time specified by the high command.

General Washington rode up, sized up the situation, and spoke to the pompous non-com, inquiring why he did not take off his hat and help out with the work himself.

The corporal poked one of the soldiers with a stick; and then turned to the general, whom he did not recognize.

"Sir," he said, haughtily, "It is not for me to do such work. I am a corporal."

General Washington thereupon shed his coat, and picking up a spade went to work. Being a powerful man, he was of great assistance and the job was soon done. The corporal glanced at him indignantly, and then feeling that something ought to be said, thanked him for his assistance and inquired his name.

"Washington," said the general, quietly.

Looking more keenly at the visitor, the little fellow fell back, and probably would have fallen on his face had not the commander of the army stopped him.

"You need not apologize," added the general. "Only the next time work is to be done by your squad, bear a hand. It will help things along."

It was characteristic of Washington, as it is among very great men, though not all of them, by a long shot, that he did not dwell on his own importance.

His job was the winning of the war. He lacked men and money. It was difficult, both to retreat when necessary or to advance when the opportunity offered.

In his later life Washington was a dignified private citizen. But he never was afraid that his dignity would be lowered by playing a man's part when the need arose.

If nothing excites you or interests you particularly—outside of a fire or a circus parade or an accident or an accident—read or better be on your guard.

Indifference was a curse long before Mr. Wordsworth wrote about the peasant to whom a princesse by the river's brink was just a flower.

If you can go through this life without getting excited now and then, you are in a bad way. You had better get excited, and ears which ought to hear and a mind which ought to think.

Employ these gifts only in the worst of bread and butter, and they will not be of much use to you.

This life ought to be profoundly intriguing, and now and then highly exciting. Get all you can out of it while you are here.

Meet as many intelligent people as you can. See every big show that is to be seen. From a shower of meteors in the sky down to a circus parade.

Read every good book which you have time to read. If you put in enough time in reading, that will mean a great many books.

Read books that will teach you something, and which will enrich your life.

LIGHTFOOT FINDS A FRIEND

As LIGHTFOOT the Deer stood A-leaping and trying to recover his breath on the shore of the river, he saw in the Big River, his great, soft, beautiful eyes watched first one bank and then the other. On the bank he had left he could see two black-and-white specks moving about, and across the water came the barking of dogs. Those two specks were the hounds who had driven him into the Big River. They were barking now instead of baying.

Presently a brown form joined the black-and-white specks and a hunter drawn there by the baying of the dogs. He was too far away to be dangerous, but the mere sight of him filled Lightfoot with terror again. He watched the hunter walk along the bank and disappear in the bushes.

Presently out of the bushes came a boat, and in it was the hunter. He headed straight toward Lightfoot, and then Lightfoot knew that his brief rest was at an end. He must once more swim or be shot by the hunter in the boat. So Lightfoot again struck out for the shore. His rest had given him new strength, but still he was very tired, and swimming was a hard work.

Slowly, oh, so slowly, he drew nearer to the bank. What new dangers there might be there he did not know. He had never been on that side of the Big River. He knew nothing of the country on that side. But the uncertainty was better than the certainty behind him. He could hear the sound of the oars as the hunter in the boat did his best to get to him before he should reach the shore.

On Lightfoot struggled. At last he felt his body leave the water. He staggered up through some bushes along the bank, and then for an instant it seemed to him his heart stopped beating. Right in front of him stood a man. He had come out into the hack yard of the home of that man. It is doubtful which was the more surprised, Lightfoot or the man. The man then and there Lightfoot gave up in despair. He couldn't run. It was all he could do to walk. The long chase by the hounds on the other side of the Big River had taken all his strength.

Not a spark of hope remained to Lightfoot. He stood still and trembled, partly with fear and partly with weariness. Then a surprise thing happened. The man spoke softly. He advanced, not threateningly, but slowly and in a friendly way. He walked around back of Lightfoot, and then straight toward him. Lightfoot walked on a few steps, the man followed, still talking softly. Little by little he urged Lightfoot on, driving him toward an open shed in which was a pile of hay. Without understanding just how, Lightfoot knew that he had found a friend. So he entered the open shed, and with a long sigh lay down in a nest of hay.

MATHEW BRADY, the First Camera Man to "Cover" a War

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS the spring of 1861. Hundreds of office-seekers, politicians, government officials and various others were trooping to the White House in Washington to seek an interview with the new President and gain some special favor from him. Among them was a young Irishman with a most unusual request.

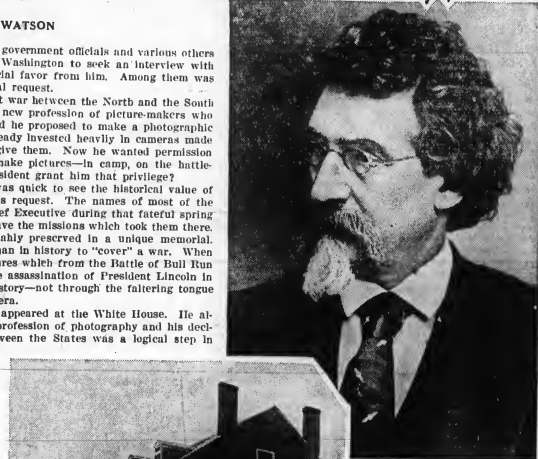

He knew, as every one else did, that war between the North and the South was a certainty. He belonged to that new profession of picture-makers who used a contraption called a camera and he proposed to make a photographic record of the war. In fact, he had already invested heavily in cameras made especially for the hard use he would give them. Now he wanted permission to accompany the Union armies and make pictures—in camp, on the battlefield, anywhere and everywhere. Would the President grant him that privilege?

Fortunately for posterity, Abraham Lincoln was quick to see the historical value of such a record and he granted the photographer's request. The names of most of the men who thronged the office of the harassed Chief Executive during that fateful spring 75 years ago have long since been forgotten, as have the missions which took them there. But the name of that photographer is imperishably preserved in a unique memorial. For he was Matthew B. Brady, the first camera man in history to "cover" a war. When he died he left behind him several thousand pictures which from the Battle of Bull Run in 1861 to the hanging of the conspirators in the assassination of President Lincoln in 1865, tell the story of the greatest civil war in history—not through the faltering tongue of man but through the infallible eye of the camera.

Brady was not exactly an unknown when he appeared at the White House. He already had made a name for himself in the new profession of photography and his decision to make a pictorial record of the War Between the States was a logical step in his career.

The son of Irish immigrants, Brady was born in Warren county, New York, near Lake George, in 1822. In his youth he moved to Saratoga Springs and there learned the trade of making jewel and instrument cases. There he also became acquainted with William Page, an artist, who had been a pupil of a portrait painter and teacher named Samuel F. B. Morse. During the winter and spring of 1838-39 Morse had been abroad and had met Etienne Daguerre, inventor of the daguerreotype. Upon his return to America he began experimenting with the process and soon became proficient in the new art.

In 1840 Page and Brady moved to New York city and through Page, Brady became acquainted with Morse. While continuing his trade of making jewel cases the young Irishman took lessons in daguerreotype from Morse and in 1844 he decided to launch into the business himself. Young Brady was ambitious, ingenious and a hard worker. As a result, when the American Institute of New York in 1844 held an exhibition of daguerreotypes, the first competitive photographic exhibit in the United States, his work was judged the best on display and he was awarded a silver medal for it. For the next six years he received similar awards from the Institute and in 1851 he was given one of three medals awarded in a great exhibition in London.

In the meantime his business had been growing rapidly. People who could not afford to have their portraits painted by an artist could afford to have their likenesses preserved in a daguerreotype and Brady's winning the Institute medals had given him special distinction. Moreover, his practice of photographing every celebrity who came to New York City and hanging their pictures in "A National Gallery" on the walls of his "salon" made it one of the city's showplaces.

A list of those who sat for Brady daguerreotypes is a roll call of all the notables of the period—Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, Dolly Madison, Edgar Allan Poe, Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, J. Fenimore Cooper, Frederick Irving, Jenny Lind, Philip Barton Key, Fanny Elliker, Pauline Cushman, Gen. Lewis Cass, Gen. John C. Fremont, James J. Audubon, Prescott, the historian; William Cullen Bryant, James Gordon Bennett, Horace Greeley, Samuel Colt, Gen. Winfield Scott, Dom Pedro, emperor of Brazil, and many others, both American and foreign.

In fact, Brady daguerretyped or photographed every President of the United States from John Quincy Adams, the sixth chief executive, down to William McKinley with the exception of one—William Henry Harrison, who died in 1841, three years before Brady began his career. Not all of these Presidents were pictured while in office. Brady secured his picture of Adams, Jackson and Van Buren after they had retired from the White House, but beginning with Tyler and Polk, his Presidential picture-taking record was unbroken for 50 years.

By 1855, when the demand for daguerreotypes reached its peak, Brady was the outstanding photographer of his day. By that time more than two million of the little metallic portraits were being made annually.

In response to this demand Brady opened a huge establishment at 259 Broadway which he called a "temple of art" and which, in its roccoco magnificence, would put some modern movie palaces to shame. By the time the Civil war opened he could have lived a life of ease on the income from this establishment. Instead, this "instinctive historian, a Bancroft of the camera," chose a career of privation and danger on the battlefields of the Civil War to record for posterity that great conflict.

He fitted up a canvas-covered wagon to carry his equipment and to serve as his dark room in the field. In it he had to make his own emulsion with which to coat the large glass plates which were his negatives. In this wagon he traveled everywhere—with Farragut on the Mississippi, with Sherman into Georgia and with a score of other Union generals. His wagon was a familiar sight everywhere in the theater of war. It plowed through muddy roads, it was ferried over rivers in constant danger of being dumped overboard and all the precious plates were lost. Although Brady's status of non-combatant gave him the right to immunity from danger, bursting shells were no respecters of persons and one of them might easily scatter the canvas wagon's contents—including the photographer himself—over the landscape.

But none ever did—for which we may be thankful. Considering the hardships under which he worked—the bulky equipment necessary for taking the pictures, the tedious process of developing the easily-broken glass negatives and all the rest—his achievement is all the more remarkable. There is a certain "stiffness" about some of his pictures because his subjects had to hold their pose for several seconds, otherwise they would have been too blurred as he made "action pictures," such as we have today, out of the question. But for all that, Brady's pictures are singularly filled with "life" and they make the past vivid to our eyes as no drawing or painting could do.

At the time the war was over Brady found himself in financial difficulty. His desire to make a pictorial record of the war had cost him dearly and, as is so characteristic of governments, our government did nothing to show its appreciation of the value of his work. Finally his collection of negatives of war pictures was sold to pay a storage bill. In 1874 William W. Belknap, secretary of war, paid the charges—amounting to $2,840—and for that sum the government acquired the priceless collection, although Brady did not benefit by the deal.

Fortunately for him, however, Gen. James A. Garfield, then a member of congress and later President, had some appreciation of the value of Brady's work and some sense of shame over the way in which the government had come into possession of the collection. He made frequent demands that something be done about it. Gen. Benjamin Butler, also a congressman, joined in the demand and finally succeeded in having a photograph inserted in the war appropriations bill "to enable the secretary of war to acquire a full and perfect title to the Brady collection of photographs of the war."

Although both Garfield and Butler declared that the collection had a commercial value of not less than $150,000, all that Brady received for it was $25,000 and that only after long delay. During this time some of the negatives were lost or broken but eventually they were deposited with the War department where today they are locked in fireproof vaults and handled with the greatest care.

Meanwhile Brady had continued his photographic studio business in Washington and the value of his post-war work is nearly as great as that of his service on the battlefields. He continued to make pictures of celebrities who visited the capital, among them delegations of Indiana who came to Washington to call on the "Great White Father."

But important as was his work in his later years, Brady had lost his pre-eminence as a photographer. Competitors were numerous and younger men with newer methods were crowding the field. So the career of this pioneer camera man ended on a somewhat tragic note—his death in comparative poverty and obscurity in New York City on January 10, 1896. His collection of war pictures in the War department is not his only memorial, however, for his work is still carried on by members of his family. During Brady's later years L. C. Handy, a nephew, became associated with him and after Brady's death Handy maintained his studio.

Today on Maryland avenue somewhat off the beaten track of busy, bustling "New Deal" Washington, an old-fashioned house bears a simple bronze plate which tells the passer-by that this is the "L. C. Handy Studio." It gives no hint of any connection with history-making events. But enter the studio and one of Brady's two daughters, or his son, will take from the cases which line the walls one of a great number of glass negatives. Hold one up to the light and you will find yourself looking into the face of Fitz-Greene Halleck, the poet, or the prince of Wales (the who later became King Edward VII)—and there is a striking resemblance to the prince of Wales who only recently became Edward VIII of England! or Chief Oursay of the Isles and his wife, Chloë, or some other notable of those far-off days when Matthew B. Brady's "National Gallery" or his "temple of art" was one of the showplaces of New York City.

GREATLY GOOD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THIS is the greatness of great deeds, By which the humble man succeeds.

Where oftentimes the mighty fails; That greatness is not measured in the name we wear or wealth we win.

Where often littlest prevail: For any can be great who would. Since all men can be greatly good.

This is the greatness of this earth, That greatness counts not wealth as worth. Nor title the important thing.

For men, what task they may pursue, Are measured by the good they do. Not by the profit it may bring.

The measure of man's brotherhood is merely being greatly good.

This is the greatness of the great, Whether they nobly lead the state. Or nobly teach a village school; That they more happiness have brought.

By noble principles they taught. Than those who poorly teach or rule. Both shall be judged, as heaven would.

By whether they are greatly good. © Douglas Malloch—WNU Service.

DR. JAMES W. BARTON
Talks About

Synthetic Exercise
MANY overweight individuals state that the reason they do not take exercise to lose weight is because the exercise so increases their appetite that they eat really more food than ever and do not lose any weight. In fact, some state that exercise increases their weight.

There is no question, of course, that exercise, particularly outdoor exercise, does stimulate the appetite, but on the other hand the greater amount of oxygen in the outdoor air is a great factor in burning up the fat in the body and thus decreasing the weight.

The idea of the exercise is to increase the speed of the circulation of the blood. As the muscles are worked by exercise, they use up an increased amount of oxygen and make an increased amount of wastes including carbon dioxide. The blood then is anxious to get back as quickly as possible to the lungs in order to get more oxygen and get rid of some of its excess load of carbon dioxide. During the exercise, as with other chemical changes, there is an increased amount of heat, and this tends to melt some of the fat in the body. Including, of course, the region where the muscles are working.

Exercise Is Ideal Reducer.
You can thus see that exercise is an ideal way of reducing weight in those for whom it is safe to exercise. And the big point is that the individual grows so much stronger physically that he or she can use or handle the body so much more easily that exercise instead of being a burden, becomes almost a pleasure. Some of the proudest individuals you meet are those who by regular exercise have not only regained their figure, but have entered into various games and sports.

It is because the drug dinitrophenol acts very much upon the body as does exercise that it has become so popular everywhere in reducing weight.

The use of the 18-day diet not only called for great strength of will in trying to live on such a small amount of food daily, but it was as weakening that a great many weak or feeble individuals have become invalids and many others died.

Similarly with the thyroid extract which made the body processes work so fast that the damage was done to the heart in a number of cases.

Use on Mental Patients.
Dr. H. Freeman Worcester, Mass., gave dinitrophenol in the regular dosage to nine male dementia praecox patients (patients who lived in a persistent dream state) but who had no organic disease of the body. The drug was given for a period of seven weeks.

The dinitrophenol greatly increased the amount of oxygen used by the body, and decreased the length of time it takes for the blood to circulate throughout the body.

This means then that the dinitrophenol by making the body require more oxygen actually heats the tissues to the point where the fat will melt, and by making the blood travel faster it would be back to the lungs for more oxygen and to give off its carbon dioxide in much less time than normal.

If this is the case why should not this drug be used instead of reducing the diet?

From all over the country reports are coming to hand regarding the harmful effects of dinitrophenol—skin ailments, collapse, and some deaths.

It would seem that just as some individuals are sensitive to the pollen of plants and so suffer with hay fever or asthma, and others are sensitive to certain drugs like quinine, so also are some individuals sensitive to dinitrophenol.

Until some very reliable tests can be made to learn whether those wishing to reduce weight can use it safely, it is recommended by those who did the original research work on dinitrophenol that it be used only under the close supervision of the physician.

High Blood Pressure
IT is generally known that overweight is a cause of high blood pressure and yet many this individuals have high blood pressure also. These individuals are easily excited emotionally and under these emotional disturbances the blood pressure immediately goes up a number of points.

Dr. D. Aymon in the American Journal of Medical Science states that in regard to the effect of personality on high blood pressure it is important to modify or lessen this so-called high blood pressure personality and to lessen the emotional and mental responses of the patient because they are accompanied by a marked rise in the blood pressure.

Cottons and Linens Go Style-High

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

COMES spring! By the signs of the times in fashion's realm you know it. When the new cottons and linens announce their arrival and when to celebrate the event, merchants and style creators hold high carnival in the way of style-revealing previews, then be assured that spring is here no matter what the calendar and the elements at large may have to say.

As a tonic that will revive faded and winter-weary spirits like magic we know of none better than the new spring and summer fashions created of refreshing, crisp and dainty wash fabrics—the new prints, sheer and otherwise, the gloriously colorful rough cottons that tailor so beautifully and the exotic printed linens that bespeak India, Tahiti, and picturesque Tyrolean peasantry.

In the advance showings there is a cotton or linen for every occasion, sporty, tailored, formal or otherwise. Dresses, suits, ensembles for morning, for street, for afternoon wear, for dinner, dancing, active spectator sports, all are included in the spring and summer parade of stylish cottons and linens. Children's fashions play a big part in the displays of spring and summer cottons and linens.

Front page news in regard to linens and cottons is they have gone that highbrow they have entered society in the form of lovely gowns as pretentiously styled as finest silks and woolsens. Then, too, as media for smart tailored suits, cottons that are as handsome-looking as wooleens and linens (the new non-crease and non-wrinkle kind) are featuring big this season.

Outstanding among the new wide-front pieces are in creases by the designer.

The Chinese art and costume is especially apparent in creations by Agnes, who also favors the Abyssinian trend, finding inspiration for her triangular and pointed crowns in the Negus coiffure.

The strong influence of the Medici period, and coiffure of the Reine Margot are themes which have been developed by Marie Alphonsine.

8 Basic Colors Adopted for Women's Fall Shoes.
Eight basic colors for women's shoes have been officially adopted for fall, 1936, by the Joint Committee of tannery, shoe manufacturers and retailers in co-operation with the Textile Color Card association, it was announced by Margaret Hayden Burke, managing director of the association. High style shoe and leather colors will be selected later, it was stated.

Five of the colors have been repeated from recent seasons. They are maroon, marine blue, chamois, Oriental oxblood and Araby green. The three new colors, which have not been named as yet, consist of a ginger type of brown, a russet brown and a dark gray.

Bright Accents
A bright light scarf, a two-toned sash or a bow neckline of contrasting color are smart on dark velvet gowns.

ly heralded fabrics are shantuns, hand-blocked linens, printed piques, lace that lends itself to tailoring, blistered sheers, and rough cottons and countless other attractive washable weaves. Plaids, stripes, checks, gorgeous floral patterns and interesting geometric motifs often of leaf influence, go to make up vast print collections.

Color is literally on the rampage with the primary hues strongly evident and pastels retaining their importance. Designers express enthusiasm for dark monotoons with high-contrast contrasts. Brown, black, the darker greens and wine shades are especially promoted as key colors. Two-piece suits with black skirts topped by bright colored or white jackets are expected to enjoy wide vogue during the coming months.

The attractive models pictured are positive proof that cottons and linens are going style high this season. This stunning suit of rough surfaced plaid cotton and the frock of printed linen called forth much admiration from an enthusiastic audience who witnessed the most brilliant and dramatically staged style revue and cotton carnival held recently in Chicago in the famous Merchandise Mart, where it is claimed more floor space is devoted to merchandise and fashion interests than any other building in the world.

A dark blouse is worn with the plaid suit. The charming linen frock in navy with red and white checkings is enlivened with heavy bright red braided frog fasteners on the blouse, thus sounding a vaquish note.

SPRING MILLINERY OF MANY PERIODS

New French millinery for advance spring fashions shows the influence of various period styles, according to recent reports from the Paris office of the Du Pont Style News Service. Hats reflecting the Flemish art are seen at several of the houses, the style being interpreted in different ways by leading designers.

The Chinese art and costume is especially apparent in creations by Agnes, who also favors the Abyssinian trend, finding inspiration for her triangular and pointed crowns in the Negus coiffure.

The strong influence of the Medici period, and coiffure of the Reine Margot are themes which have been developed by Marie Alphonsine.

Smart Jacket Dress With Bows of Print

Versatility is an engaging quality in this little two piece frock. Make it feminine with bows and a belt of bright print, or slightly mannish with round buttons and a narrow belt.

The hip length jacket with its cutaway effect and front panel are the dominating features of the dress. Notice how the gathers peep cunningly in back and front beneath the circular yoke. A simple skirt, but not too simple to be attractive. Individualism is attributed to the wide tailored pleats in the front.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1834-B is available for sizes: 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4 1/2 yards of 35-inch fabric—plus 1/4 yard of contrasting material.

Our Failure in Character Is the Tragedy of Life

Life is given for wisdom, and yet we are not wise; for goodness, and we are not good; for overcoming evil, and evil remains; for patience and sympathy and love, and yet we are fearful and hard and weak and selfish. This is the tragical feature of life—that it is linked with so much failure in character. Are most of us considering success and failure in this high and eternal light? We ought to be.

Seasonal Companions

Two men were traveling in a smoking compartment of a north-bound train. Presently one, hoping to break the ice, asked his fellow traveler for a match to light his pipe. After this had been conceded they began talking. "What's your line of business?" asked the first. "I'm a sound strange," said the other, "but I'm a pepper traveler." The first man threw out his hand. "Shake," he said. "I'm a salt seller."

Wrong Kind of Feeling
A man who was cut off relief and didn't get a W. P. A. job was telling his hard luck tale to a friend who had a good-paying job. "My friend," said the latter, "I feel very much in my heart for you."

"What about feeling in your pocket for me?" asked the unfortunate one.—Pathfinder Magazine.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

ONE of the best pictures made in this or any other year is R. K. O.'s "Follow the Fleet," the new Rogers-Astaire effort. It's delightful from start to finish. Fred Astaire has developed remarkably as a comedian. And the Irving Berlin songs are all hits, especially "We Joined the Navy," which has been played and sung so often on the radio. Randolph Scott makes a good foil for Astaire, and Harriet Hilliard, a recent recruit from the radio, does very well indeed. Ginger Rogers' very pretty young mother feels—and says, without hesitation—that Ginger isn't getting enough credit for her work as a member of the Rogers-Astaire team. She points out the fact that Ginger was an accomplished dancer when Fred was still taking lessons. Whereupon the lively Fred's friends and admirers rise up to declare that he is a natural dancer, that Ginger was never so good before she began dancing with him.

The arrival of Laura LaPlante's infant daughter has sent many a cable buzzing over the sea, for Laura has always been popular in movie circles, and so has her husband, Irving Asher. He is one European representative of the new big motion picture firms.

Remember Helen Holmes, of that hair-raising scandal of the old days, "The Hazards of Helen"? She is working in W. C. Fields' new picture, "Poppy," on the Paramount lot. She has only a small part, but hopes to get bigger ones, though she has no illusions of becoming a star again.

It doesn't seem possible that the talkies are ten years old; surely it's ten years since we saw the first one, and thought them terrible. But the tenth anniversary has come round, and will be celebrated by the re-making of "The Jazz Singer," the picture that made Al Jolson a screen star.

Ethel Shutta, widely known in the world of night clubs, is now a regular radio visitor each Saturday night at 10:30 p. m., EST, over a coast to coast NBC radio network. Best known for a rather odd type of vocalizing, she privately prefers lullaby tunes. Maybe that's because in private life she is Mrs. George Olsen (wife of the band leader on this same program) and the mother of two youngsters, Charles, aged eight, and George, Jr., aged six.

Sometimes being an actress is a drawback. Irene Dunn has found this to be the case. Her jewels, insured for $7,000, were stolen, and the "insurance" company doesn't want to pay her, claiming that actresses wear their jewels too ostentatiously, and are a bad risk.

Paramount likes Carole Lombard and Gary Cooper as a team; they're scheduled to make three pictures together. Meanwhile Gary is having a grand vacation and doesn't even want to remember the movies.

Charlie Farrell must have been happy when he landed in Australia and the film fans mobbed him; it's been a long time since the public showed any particular interest in him as an actor. He'll make a picture there, and may like it well enough to stay and do several.

"Little Lord Fauntleroy" was given its first public showing at Warm Springs, Ga., and a copy of the book, photographed by Freddie Bartholomew, the picture star, was given to each of the children at the Warm Springs foundation.

ODDS AND ENDS—Ed Wynn bought time on the radio so that his mother, who lives in Atlantic City, could hear his weekly programs. . . . Clara Bow visited Hollywood recently with her husband, and declared that the noise of the city drove her crazy. . . . It's reported that Joan Blondell didn't get her bonus from the studio because she left at five each day to hurry home to see her baby. . . . "If I was Secretary," with Joan Harlow, Myrna Loy and Clark Gable, is one of the pictures that all women will want to see. . . . Bing Crosby puts in a lot of work on these radio programs of his; takes them very seriously. . . . If you like thrillers be sure to see Boris Karloff in "The Walking Dead."

A Charming Needlecraft Picture to Embroider

The old-time well—the bucket hanging there, just waiting to be embroidered in its natural setting. And what a lovely and colorful waiting hanging you'll have when finished! You can use as many bright threads as fancy dictates when you begin to "paint" the old-fashioned garden in lazy-days, French knots, running and single stitch. And you needn't frame the panel—just line it and hang it up.

In pattern 2597 you will find a transfer pattern of a well-hanging 15 by 20 inches; a color chart; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches needed; directions for finishing well hanging.

Why the Delay On Highway?

Verona-Glencoe Highway From Myers Gap to Glencoe Has Been Graded Since 1935

There has been considerable inquiry as to why the Verona-Glencoe Highway has not received the attention of the State Highway Department. This highway was graded last fall its entire length of about 11 miles, and up to the present time there has been no indication of surfacing the road, either in concrete or "black top." It behooves the citizens living along this road to implore the State Highway Department to "get busy." The road has been graded for high type surfacing.

A. O. Kratz Died Monday

Was City Commissioner of Covington and Former City Manager

Oscar A. Kratz, age 52, died suddenly Monday morning at 11 o'clock from heart attack. He was city commissioner of Covington and former city manager of that city. He was stricken at his metal stamping company, 1214 Clark street, Covington, and was taken to his home, 2832 Ashland avenue, Latonia, where he suffered another attack which proved fatal.

He came to Covington in 1930 from Dubuque, Iowa, where he was city manager. He served two years as city manager of Covington. He was afterwards elected city commissioner. He was born in Albion, Mich., and was a graduate of Michigan State College. While city manager in Covington, he married Miss Viola Blackburn, his secretary. Besides his wife, he is survived by one daughter, Miss Beverly Kratz, and four sons, Malcolm, Wendell, Donald and Courtney Kratz.

Mr. Kratz was scrupulously honest and was very popular with citizens of Covington, and while he at times was somewhat erratic, he guarded the interests of the people zealously and allowed no one to put anything over on him.

Fellowship Meeting

The quarterly meeting of Fellowship dinner of the Walton Methodist church which meets every three months, enjoyed a most delightful time in the basement of the church on Friday night. Three large tables were occupied by members assembled. A miscellaneous donation of many good things to eat by the ladies was also present.

One table was assigned members. One table was assigned to C. E. Hall in honor of his birthday anniversary. His excellent wife had prepared fried chicken, a birthday cake, etc., in honor of the occasion and this table was assigned to the honor guest and his gentleman friends.

Rev. Robt. R. Rose, the pastor was master of ceremonies and made an interesting talk as did several others. These meetings have become quite popular with most of the members of this church and have been productive of much good.

State Whisky Tax

Passed By House At Special Session of Kentucky Legislature

The latter part of last week the Kentucky House of Representatives passed a new $2,500,000 tax bill without a dissenting vote, something of political history in the state. The bill provides a stamp tax of 13 cents a pint on whisky, with increase of the beer tax from $1.25 to $1.50 a barrel, and an increase of the wine tax from $1.25 to $1.50 a gallon, were proposed in the measure. The Senate kicked up a rumpus over a proposed increase on whisky but the original bill was accepted without serious objection. No revenue tax of any consequence is in sight other than the whisky tax.

Governor Chandler proposes a 3 percent tax on automobiles and this is expected to be met with opposition.

Hauptman Died Friday Night

When the Law Electrocuted Him For the Lindbergh Baby Kidnap-Murder

Bruno Richard Hauptmann was electrocuted at Trenton, N. J. State Penitentiary, Friday night at 8:47 for the murder of baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., March 1, 1932. It was not until September 19, 1934, that Hauptmann was arrested in the Bronx when detectives found nearly $15,000 marked currency on his premises which was part of the $50,000 demanded in ransom from Col. Chas. A. Lindbergh. As the crime was committed in Hopewell, New Jersey, Hauptmann's trial began at Flemington, that state, January 2nd. The verdict of the jury was murder in the first degree with no recommendation of mercy. On June 20th Hauptmann's counsel argued the case before the Court of Errors, and the court upheld the verdict. On Nov. 12th, application was made to the United States Supreme Court for review of the Flemington trial, on the grounds that Hauptmann's constitutional rights were violated. The court rejected the application. On December 12th, Justice Trenchard set the week of January 13th for execution of death sentence.

On January 13th, the Warden of the State Penitentiary, where Hauptmann was confined, issued invitations to 18 execution witnesses. January 11th, New Jersey Court of Pardons refused Hauptmann's appeal of commutation of sentence. January 16th Governor Hoffman signed 30 day reprieve, and on Feb. 19th, Justice Trenchard fixed the week of March 30th for execution. On March 31st, as preparations were made to execute Hauptmann, he was granted a 48 hour reprieve to investigate the statement of a debarred attorney which he afterward repudiated, that he had killed the Lindbergh child. This latter statement was declared false and April 3rd was fixed for the execution.

The consensus of opinion is that Hauptmann was guilty of knowledge of the kidnap-murder, if not the actual criminal, as the marked money was found on his premises and he acknowledged he knew of it being there.

It was one of the most diabolical crimes ever committed in this country. Think of the poor little innocent baby with its bright curly hair surrounded by comforts and loved ones, snatched from its cradle by a beast and carried into the wintry night to suffer until death came.

Sometime Thursday night or Friday morning, Elmer Cammack, age 23, a well known and popular farmer of Jonesville, Owen county, Ky., took his life by firing a 22 calibre bullet into his heart. His little daughter Billy Jean, age 4, was sleeping with her father at the time but the shot failed to arouse her.

His mother, Mrs. Harvey Cammack, discovered him dead in bed when she went to awaken her granddaughter. The following note was found in the room: "You will be surprised when you see what I have done, but I think this is the best way out. I have worried for two years. You can put the children in an orphan home."

Fire Scare Sunday

Sunday afternoon about 2 o'clock a false alarm was turned in to the Walton Volunteer Fire Department. However, the alarm was caused by considerable smoke and flame coming out of the chimney at the home of W. B. Johnson. It appears he had placed some debris on the grate to burn and it set fire to the soot in the chimney. The fire department responded very promptly and Mr. Johnson wishes to thank them for their promptness, notwithstanding there was no fire.

Egypt Was in Existence
Before Recorded History

Egypt, as a nation, arose before the beginning of recorded history. Even at that early day, its people were cultivators, builders, artists, and priests, and not to be compared to the savages of the present day.

The simple savages that still inhabit the jungles, still, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune, have been going on for centuries.

The dawn of Egypt is shrouded in a myth of fearful gods and goddesses, but the nation was an old one when King Seneferu built the pyramid of Meidum, possibly as early as 4500 B. C. King Menes, founder of the first dynasty, was born many centuries after the establishment of kings and their kingdoms in the valley of the Nile. It is nearly 3,500 years since there reigned in Egypt the great King Thutmose III, who conquered Palestine and Syria, overthrew the Hittites, and placed his nation at the height of its power. Ramesses II, who lived in the Thirteenth century before Christ and also subdued Palestine and Syria, is believed to have been the Pharaoh of Israel's oppression. A.D. Moses and the children of Israel out of Egypt 500 to 600 years before the legendary founding of Rome by Romulus and Remus.

TRY THIS TRICK
By PONJAY HARRAH
Copyright by Public Ledger, Inc.

A MYSTERIOUS KNOT

THIS is a very deceptive trick that can be done with an ordinary handkerchief. The knot can hold the handkerchief by one corner. It raises the lower corner, then shakes it loose.

The movement is repeated, the free hand always bringing up the loose end. Finally, on the third shake, a knot appears in the lower corner of the handkerchief.

You must prepare for this trick by tying a knot in the upper corner of the handkerchief. That corner is held hidden by the thumb and fingers of the right hand. After twice raising the lower corner and shaking it down again, simply change the ends.

You retain the original lower corner, while the knotted corner falls, done smoothly, this completely deceives the onlookers. They will think that you actually shook a knot into a corner of the handkerchief.

Upon calling the Boone county sheriff, Pearson Blackburn got in touch with the owner, said to be Bob Reynolds of Walton, whose car was stolen from a dance at Verona. Obviously the thieves were stripping the car then. Other robberies of car parts were reported here the past week. Thieves stole tools and tried to get parts off the truck of F. Blackburn last Monday night, and the same night stole parts from W. M. Lavin's car.

Boone County Farm Notes

H. R. Ferkner, County Agent

Build Brick Brooder

Mrs. Cad Shelling of near Burlington, recently constructed a new poultry brooder house with a brick brooder. Many Boone county poultrymen have constructed both the brick brooders and the Double Barrel brooders, recommended by the College of Agriculture. The chief advantage of these type brooders is low cost, use home grown fuel and do a satisfactory job of heating. Plans for the brick and double barrel brooders are available at the County Agent's office.

Boone County poultrymen as a whole are doing a much more successful job of poultry raising. The reason for this improvement is better equipment and the clean chick brooding program.

Close Culling Pays—Grant Maddox, owner of a large commercial poultry flock, near Florence, believes in close culling—of his laying flock during the winter months. Those birds that slip into egg production are immediately sold for meat.

The above flock was composed of 100 birds on November 1st, and 712 birds on March 1st. During the four month period 323 birds or approximately 30% were culled and sold for meat. During this four month period this flock paid a labor income above expenses of approximately $13.35 per bird and was one of the most profitable flocks in the State for this period.

Strong, healthy pullets to put in the laying house in the fall is another secret to Mr. Maddox's success. All birds are raised strictly according to the Clean Chick brooding plan. These plans may be secured at the County Agent's office on request.

Utopia Meeting—Boone County Utopia Club No. 2 members enjoyed a good program presented at their 10th annual meeting held at Burlington last Wednesday evening.

The next meeting will be held on Thursday evening, April 16th at 7:15 p. m. The following program has been planned:

Discussion by Robert Graves—"What is the Best Method for a Young Man to get Started in Farming in my Community."

Discussion by William Moore—"What Size and Quality of Farm Will Maintain the Living You Desire, Pay Ordinary Farm Expenses and Leave you Free from Debt after 20 to 30 Years of Ownership."

Discussion by Earl Anderson—"Flowers for the Old Door Garden—When and How to Plant Them."

Discussion by Earl Tanner—"Constructing a Home Made Fly Trap—Horton Group will be in charge."

Live Program Delayed—The agricultural limestone crushing project of the Boone County Soil Improvement Association is being temporarily delayed due to the wet weather. The condition of the roads and soft ground has not only delayed the movement of the pulverizer but farmers and OOC workers in piling up the rock for the crusher.

R. W. Auton, operator of the pulverizer reports that approximately 50 tons per day is being crushed where a full day's work is secured. The majority of the farmers originally signing up for agricultural limestone have been served. All farmers listing stone will be taken care of before the completion of the program, providing their stone is piled when the pulverizer gets to their place. A closing date will be set for new requests. It is therefore, highly important that all new requests be turned in to the County Agent's office at Burlington, immediately.

Boone County Seventh in Bang's Disease Control—In Boone county, 5,700 cattle and 568 herds have been tested for Bang's disease since the beginning of work up until Jan. 31, 1936, according to reports of Dr. W. F. Bile, Inspector in Charge U. S. Bureau Animal Industry at Frankfort, 632 or 11.1 per cent of these animals have been tested and were sold for slaughter.

Boone county ranked seventh among all counties in the State in number of cattle tested. Christian county ranked first with 10,831 head tested, followed by Nelson county, Shelby county, Hardin county, Graves county and Warren county. A total of 200,753 cattle in the State have been tested with 15,768 or approximately 8 per cent reacting.

The elimination of Bang's disease has not only eliminated the disease itself but many secondary factors including general health of the cows, many under diseases and other problems. The Federal Government for a limited time is paying all costs of testing and is paying on the basis of the appraisal value and slaughter value of reactors up to $25.00 for grades and $50.00 for purebreds. Dr. Kenneth Ryle, Burlington, is in charge of the testing work in Boone county. Any farmer may have his herd tested by calling Dr. Ryle. Farmers wishing to have their herds cleaned up must request this service as it is strictly a voluntary program and is available only on request. Requests should be made before the present appropriations are exhausted.

Poultry Expansion Through Clean Chick Program—There will be considerable expansion of poultry production in Boone county this year. This expansion will for the most part be conducted under the five point system of the Clean Chick program, namely:

1. Clean Chicks—B. W. D. free. 2. Clean Ground—No poultry on for 2 or more years. 3. Clean Equipment—Sooled and disinfected. 4. Balanced Rations—Clean feed. 5. Clean Management.

Poultry production expanded on this basis, (ignoring the meat and feed price changes) will be on a sound plan.

Two breeders, Grant Maddox of Florence, and J. F. Cleek of Beaver have enlarged their capacity to hatch and sell baby chicks. Both breeders are close followers of the clean chick program and expect to raise more birds themselves and have made larger than usual sales of baby chicks this year.

The national poultry outlook for 1936 indicates there will be increased production but that feed prices will likely be favorable. Despite the general market outlook Boone county is most favorably situated for greatly increasing the amount of poultry produced.

College of agriculture circular giving recommendations on the Clean Chick Brooding program, feeding, management and other important poultry problems are available at the County Agent's office upon request.

251 Members Enrolled—Two hundred and fifty-one Boone County boys and girls between the ages of 10 and 18 years are enrolled in the 4-H club program for 1936.

Most members are expected to be enrolled during the third series of meetings to be held at the various schools in the county beginning on Tuesday.

One hundred and twenty-eight boys are enrolled in the 9 different clubs in the following projects: 69 tobacco, 25 garden, 23 poultry, 11 livestock, 5 corn, 5 potatoes, 3 pig, 3 sheep, 3 dairy and 2 rabbit. One hundred and twenty-three girls are enrolled in the following projects: 73 sewing, 38 canning, 16 poultry, 13 tobacco, 1 garden and 1 cooking.

AAA Tobacco Allotment Cards—Quite a few AAA tobacco allotment cards have not returned their 1935 tobacco allotment or sales card to the county office, according to John E. Crisler, secretary of the Tobacco Association.

The tobacco section will probably call for these cards in the near future and your cooperation in returning these cards will assist in the work of completing the 1935 tobacco contract.

New Farm Program Out—The New Soil Conservation program was announced to Boone county farmers last week. They are much interested in the farm program and most of them are hoping for a program that will be equally effective as the old AAA. The County Agent's office thru its local committeemen will use every effort to inform farmers to the earliest possible date the details of the new program.

4-H Leaders Meet—4-H Sewing and Canning project leaders of Burlington, Grant, Hebron and Petersburg clubs held an all day meeting at Burlington, last Thursday, March 26th.

Miss Edith Lacy, Home Economics Specialist and Miss Gillaspie, Assistant Home Demonstration Agent met with the leaders.

4-H Spring Rally—Boone County 4-H Club members are planning for the Annual 4-H Spring Rally to be held at Burlington, Friday, May 29th. The affair will be an all day meeting.

The morning period will be devoted to instructions of officers and leaders in conducting meetings and supervising project work. County contests in farm and home practice demonstrations in improved practices and sewing club girls style show contests will be held in the afternoon. The winners of these contests will represent the county at Junior Week, June 8th to 13th held at the University of Kentucky.

Line Association Program—The Boone County Soil Improvement Association Executive Committee voted to postpone the line pulverizing project until this fall. As practically all rock piled has been crushed and present spring work is rushed to expect many farmers to pile rock for the next three months.

Hubert Conner, Secretary, reports that 3400 tons of the 7200 tons originally listed had been pulverized to date. Joel Gray, President, reported the winter had been adverse to farm work. The Sunday collecting rock and the ground in recent weeks had been too soft to haul stone if they were available on the farm.

Plans are to complete the work this fall for all farmers listed, provided they will pile their stone and be ready when the pulverizer makes the second trip over the county.

Wool Growers Meet

Boone County Wool growers met at Burlington Courthouse, Monday afternoon, April 6th to make plans for selling the 1936 clip.

Wool Growers Meet

Boone County Wool growers held their Annual Organization meeting at Burlington Courthouse, Monday, April 6th. A large delegation of growers were present. Growers were optimistic as to the prospects for prices this year.

The following officers were elected to preside for 1936: H. E. White, president; Lillard Scott, secretary-treasurer. The following solicitors were appointed: Charles Stevens, Petersburg; Clint Riddell, Bullsville; Lloyd McGlasson, Constance; C. F. Blankenship, Florence; Erna Blankenship, Union; John W. Conley, Beaver; O. K. Powers, Verona; B. W. Franks, Walton; O. Y. Kelly, Carrollton; H. E. White, Burlington; Lillard Scott, Grant.

The growers considered the present dog situation serious in that losses have been heavier than usual and fewer dogs have been licensed. The growers voted unanimously the following resolutions:

"Whereas there has been only 837 dogs licensed in Boone County, whereas there are 2235 listed for license tax in Boone County, and whereas there has been sheep killed recently by dogs valued at $1897.50 we offer the following resolution:

1. That the Sheriff of Boone County enforce 100% the State Dog Law and the collection of dog tax and that the Sheriff be strongly supported in this work.

2. That a list of all unlicensed dogs be prepared and presented to the Boone County Grand Jury of the April Term of Court.

3. That the April Grand Jury bring indictments against all owners of dogs who have not purchased tags by that date."

SWANEE JUBILEE AN ENTERTAINING PROGRAM

The minstrel, "Swanee Jubilee," presented at the school auditorium last Thursday evening by the Willing Workers class of the Christian church was a very entertaining program. The comedy was capably taken care of by the "end men," and the special numbers—singing, dancing, and instrumental—were pleasingly done. The one-act play "Henry's Mail Order Wife," which climaxed the evening's performance, was extremely funny and the characters were well portrayed.

The attendance was rather small due partly to the inclement weather, and the class did not realize as much as they should have, considering the time and work involved in giving a program of this type.

KENTUCKY COLONELS ARE ABOLISHED

Attorney General Says After Governor Leaves Office

Attorney General Beverly M. Vincent says there are no more Kentucky Colonels. With the term of office of the appointing governor expiring, the "commission" of thousands of colonels appointed by Governors Lafoon and Sampson, lose their title.

It was in the opinion of many, one of the most silly features ever introduced by the governors of the state and has been considerably ridiculed.

And now comes Jesse Duval, a Texas legislator, formerly of Warsaw, who makes another innovation and visiting Frankfort, commissions Governor "Happy" Chandler a "Texas as Ranger Captain."

Many farmers have already agreed to ship all of their products of this nature to the Corporation which promises to be a real benefit to all farmers in disposing of products of the nature handled by the new concern at the least possible cost to the farmer and producer for him the greatest possible return for his products.

Go-to-Sunday-School Day

The Go-To-Sunday-School Day Campaign for 1936 will include five Sundays, beginning April 5th as Every Member Day; April 12th as Church Day; April 19th as Family Day; April 26th as Neighbor Day; May 3rd as Kentucky Day, when all people of Kentucky would find a welcome if they attended some Sunday school.

"This movement is not to help any one Sunday School, but is intended to help every Sunday School in the State. It creates a Sunday School atmosphere. It reminds people that one of the finest things in life is to know and worship God and to learn what God has done for man and what God expects of man in his dealings with his fellow-men."

"You cannot teach the people unless you reach them." The Go-To-Sunday-School Day Campaign is an earnest effort to reach all the people of Kentucky with an annual invitation to attend Sunday School.

Tonics Not Recommended: Birds Should Be Healthy

Tonics for poultry are not often recommended. If they are given a variety of feeds, constituting a balanced ration they will not need stimulants, as a writer in the Montreal Herald. Barley, oats, wheat and cracked corn or corn are available on most farms. Ground in equal proportions a good mash is produced which will be enjoyed and will be healthful, fattening and egg producing. Of course vegetables, alfalfa leaves or other green feed are necessary to assist in assimilating the grains. The mash may be fed dry or moist.

Grit is necessary if the gizzard is to function efficiently; crushed oyster shell or similar lime containing substances will be required if hens are to lay well; cod liver oil should be fed in small quantities when hens are confined in pens where they get little or no sunshine. Hens that are fed heavily for laying should be given a dose of Epsom salts once a month at the rate of one pound to 100 hens, dissolved in drinking water in the morning with no other water available. Meat scrap also is of great value in some cases. Water is an essential for all poultry. It should be fresh, pure and not cold in winter time. Dry, well ventilated houses are also necessary in winter.

Poultry Notes

For typhoid for several other ailments one can do little for the ailing chickens.

Provision should always be made to keep pullets separate from old hens when they are removed to laying houses.

Thirty-six hundred eggs an hour are said to be handled by a new automatic egg breaking and separating machine.

The surplus roosters will be appreciated here if put away in cans; a helpful form of subsistence farming.

Preventing the drinking of surface water by the flock is an important step in reducing disease.

The best time to caponize cocks is when they are small. They should not be larger than two pounds.

Any chick that delays feathering should be banded a distinct color band and not kept for breeding purposes.

ITALIAN INFLUENCE IN SLEEVE STYLES

The style of sleeve has been noticeably affected by the exhibition of Italian art in Paris. Very full sleeves have the preference with a few close-fitted ones, often detachable, and shaped like those in Italian portraits, which resemble a long mitten reaching above the elbow. These mitten sleeves are often in velvet that contrasts in material and color with the rest of the dress.

Some of the models are made entirely of vinyl covered transparent plastic materials, such as sequin on a dull black rayon velvet dress with matching hand at the round neckline. The art exhibition has the most magnificent sleeves, slashed over contrasting colored fabric, as well as very long medieval sleeves that fall to the hem of the skirt in panel style.

Dead White Most Popular Color for Evening Clothes

Top hats, gleaming white shirt fronts, glittering gold and silver lame, that's the fashion picture by night, according to Carmel Snow, editor of Harper's Bazaar.

"People are dressing up as they haven't in years," she says. "It has been suggested that the jubilee in London last June is responsible for all this dressing and this splendor. Certainly it has taught us all to dress in the grand style."

"To get back to what we are wearing in America, in the evening, after luncheon, the most important color is dead white—as pure as marble. The draped dresses that Vionnet made her great success with this autumn are many of them marble white."

Plaid Dress

A new version of the plaid dress shows a shirt with three overlapping tiers, entirely plaid, and a blouse plaid except for yoke and sleeves.

Feeding Idle Horses

Idle horses do not need grain but can be carried in good condition on about half a pound of hay daily for each 100 pounds weight, says the Prairie Farmer. On light work of two to four hours a day they should receive one-half to three-fourths pound grain and 15 pounds of hay or good roughage for each 100 pounds of weight. On heavy work they should have a pound to 1½ pounds of grain and a pound of hay to each 100 pounds weight. Excessive feeding of hay is unnecessary.

STREAMLINE PORTABLE

Sells for $49.50

This New Remington Streamline Portable is modern in every respect. It is a standard typewriter in every feature—has 4-row keyboard, double shift keys and shift lock, adjustable margin stops and margin release, back spacer, two-color ribbon with automatic reverse and stencil cut-out. It has "Self-Starting" paragraph key, which brings professional speed and neatness to the amateur typist.

Note the big, massive sturdiness of this new Streamline Portable, its graceful lines and glistening finish. Its trimmings are full nickel finish throughout—its color, hard baked black enamel. A most beautiful portable—from any point of view.

CARRYING CASE FREE—A new ultra-smart carrying case is furnished with the Remington 5 Portable. This case is sturdily built, covered with heavy DuPont fabric. Nickel plated hardware. Two locks. The case is just the proper size for a smart ladies over-night case when the typewriter is removed.

It is impossible for us to describe this machine so that you may know just the amount of quality and value it possesses.

We invite you to come in to the office at your convenience and examine it; write on it; then you can see for yourself.

Kenton County Farm News

No Contract With

New Soil Program
There is no contract in connection with the new soil conservation program, points out a statement from the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture. In other words, cooperation by farmers will be voluntary.

There are two forms for the farmer to fill out. One is the work sheet, to be used in establishing a base, and in which are listed the acreages of the various crops on the farm. The other form is an application to be made later in the year for payment for compliance.

The first step that farmer takes in qualifying to participate in the program is that of filling out the work sheet to establish a soil-depleting base. One base is established for tobacco and cotton and another base for all other crops.

The tobacco base is that established for 1935-39, under the AAA program, or in case of a non-signer the acreage ordinarily grown, subject to such adjustments as the local committee may make. For other crops the base is the acreage grown in 1935, adjusted by the local committee. Members of community committees and workers in the county agent's office will assist in filling out work sheets.

Under the new program a farmer may change up to 30 percent of his tobacco base acreage into soil-building crops and receive a payment of 5 cents a pound for his normal yield of burley and 3½ cents for dark tobacco on the land shifted from tobacco production.

In the case of corn and small grains, sweet sorghum, soybeans harvested for hay and seed, potatoes and sweet potatoes and other soil-depleting crops, farmers will receive payments per acre according to the ratio of productivity as compared to an average of $10 an acre for the whole country. A shift in these acreages may be made up to 15 percent of the base.

The foregoing payments are known as soil-conserving or diversion payments. In addition, a farmer may obtain a payment for planting approved soil-building crops or for carrying out approved soil-building practices. The rate of this payment will be recommended by the State Committee, but the total soil-building payment for each farm cannot exceed $1 for each acre of crop land on the farm used in 1936 for soil-building and soil-conserving purposes.

Farmers cooperating in the new program will not be required to change 30 percent of their tobacco base acreage or 15 percent of the base of other crops to soil-conserving crops, but they must have a total acreage in soil-building and soil-conserving uses on their farms this year at least equal to 20 percent of the soil-depleting base, or divert the necessary percentage to receive the maximum payments.

Another limitation is that no farmer will be paid for diverting acreage unless he produces a surplus above the farm needs of food and feed.

WINTER COATS WARM YET NOT AWKWARD

Gorgeous Scotch Tweeds Are Much in Favor.

On top of everything comes the coat question. Will you have yours dashing and gay or suave and sleek? Or else perhaps, black tweed? It has a jaunty swing to the back, full tucked sleeves and a trick collar that is made of the material rolled into something of a sausage shape and tied close about the neck, ending in two loose ends.

From the bonny Scotch highlands comes a gorgeous pink tweed. Lynx trims this coat.

If you don't like to snuggle in fur, there's something very special out now in the way of a tailored coat that resembles a man's Chesterfield. In fact the resemblance is so good that should you like to put on an act, be it brother or sister or what you will, you can go forth practically like identical twins.

The Egyptian Lady's Bath
The services of four handmaids were required to make the bath of an Egyptian lady of quality all that a bath was supposed to be. "She sat upon a mat, while one maid held a fragrant flower to her nose and supported her with one hand. Another maiden poured water over her from an urn of rare beauty while a third and a fourth were required to massage her arms and hold her ornaments.

Odd Beliefs
The world still possesses people who believe that dwarfs and midgets are children who never grow up, tribes that cannot "see" or understand a photograph, and individuals who are under the impression that they can stimulate their ability to sing by drinking water in which photographic needles have been immersed for several days.—Mrs. H. C. Steele, Olympia, Wash., in Collier's Weekly.

"The Ford V-8 uses less fuel and oil for the power it gives than any other car we have ever made

AND ITS UP-KEEP COST IS THE LOWEST"

ENTHUSIASTIC sales talk often begins and ends with gasoline mileage. Some salesmen would like you to believe it is the whole story of automobile economy. But drivers ought to know better. For, the fact is, it's way down the list.

The big items of car economy are low first cost, low up-keep cost and low depreciation. Savings here can make a great deal of difference in cost per mile. Gasoline mileage is more of a talking point than an economy factor.

Check up and you will find that the difference between 17 and 19 miles a gallon is less than $10 for a whole year's average driving (8400 miles at 18 cents a gallon). Here are the big items that make the Ford the most economical car:

More value for every dollar you pay.

Lower cost for repairs and service.

Long life. Slow depreciation.

Quality means economy and the 1936

Ford V-8 gives you more real quality than any other low-price car. No other car under $1645 has a V-8 engine. No other low-price car has Center-Poise

Riding, safe, sure mechanical brakes and Safety Glass all around at no extra cost.

MARKET ROASTERS FOR EXTRA PROFIT

Way to Dispose of Surplus Heavier Breeds.

In seeking new ways to diversify their industry, eastern poultrymen have been experimenting with marketing small lots of young roasters, during the last few years, using surplus males of such breeds as Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, New Hampshire and Wyandottes.

One of the best quality poultry meat products offered anywhere in the world has been the Sussex light roasters. English poultrymen have found that surplus males from the heavier breeds are highly desirable roasting fowls when finished for the market during the fall months and sold at an appropriate weight of six pounds. Disposing of surplus males in this way has been found to be more profitable than selling them earlier as broilers or carrying them until the holiday season of mid-winter to be sold as roasters or capons.

Roasters, when raised, should be kept in good condition, and should be finished before being marketed. Keep them combined two or three weeks and feed them a very much comparative diet rich in fattening ingredients. Just before being sold, if properly done, such finishing will add from three-fourths to one and one-half pounds in weight and will insure a great improvement in quality.

Tumor, Bumblefoot, Corns, Common in Poultry Flock

It is a common thing to find upon the feet of old fowls enlargements of a rubbery nature that are usually given the bird no thought. At times, according to an authority in the Rural New Yorker, such tumors or tumors become so large as to form a source of pain with the bird, often opening and becoming abscesses. The majority of the tumors need no treatment, as they do not progress and do not injure the fowl. If, however, they open, they may be treated like any other abscess, given free opening with a sharp blade, that they may discharge their contents, be syringed out daily with a mild antiseptic solution and the bird kept upon clean, soft litter until healing occurs. Some of these abscesses, however, are of a tubercular nature and not curable by simple means.

These simple tumors—and any enlargement of a localized nature upon or within the body of a "fowl"—may be a condition called "bumblefoot." Some injury to the foot, such as might be caused by jumping from a high perch to a hard floor, or an injury from scratching is assumed to be a frequent cause, though, where pus formation occurs, there must also be an infection by pus forming bacteria from within or without. "Corns" also occur upon the feet of fowls. When hard and evidently painless, these formations need give the owner of the bird no concern.

With the Poultrymen

England's National Poultry Council declares the importance of Chinese eggs is a menace to health.

The care of pullets during the summer months largely determines next year's profits.

One of the most important factors in successful turkey raising is that the turkeys be provided with a clean range.

Shifting fowl from pen to pen and from place to place is an agent in the spread of respiratory diseases.

Backyard middings may be used in poultry mash in the place of wheat bran or other middings.

Plenty of room is the first step in successful raising of chicks with artificial heat.

Pullets are no more profitable egg producers than hens, says Michigan state college.

Lameness in hens is usually caused by parasites which weaken the bird until it becomes crippled.

Save work by using pits under roost instead of dropping boards, says Ohio Experiment station.

In Malay today, some of the more primitive natives use the rooster both as an alarm clock and as a watch dog, because of the way he crows at regular times during the day and night and because of the alarm he gives when he hears strange noises.

Bread has practically the same feeding value as flour wheat midlings and may be utilized to advantage as part of the poultry ration when purchased cheaply. Bread, alone or with cornmeal, makes a very one-sided ration for growing chicks or layers.

Boone County Homemakers

Presidents of the local Homemakers groups met at the Courthouse in Burlington last week for a county Advisory Council Meeting to decide on the county wide program of work for the Homemakers Clubs. They elected temporary officers, President, Mrs. J. P. Clerk; Vice Pres. Mrs. Marie Mae Hamilton and Secy-Treas. Mrs. John L. Vest.

The Council voted to have a membership campaign in April to raise the enrollment from 150 to 200.

Miss Mary Hood Gillespie, Asst. Home Dem. Agent, told about the Blue Grass and Central District Federation meeting of the Homemakers Clubs of Ky., to be held in Lexington, Saturday, April 18th at the Bryan Station High School building two miles from Lexington, on the Eastlin road. She reported that nine Boone County women have made reservations for the luncheon to be held at the Federation meeting. Mrs. Evelyn Tobey, stylist of New York City, will give a talk both in the morning and afternoon session.

Miss Gillespie told the Council of the Convention of Associated country women of the World to be held the first week in June in Washington, D. C.

Those present at the meeting were: Burlington—Mrs. Helen S. Kelly; Florence, Mrs. Joe Denkeiser; Hebron, Mrs. W. P. Hollis; Petersburg, Mrs. J. H. Huey; Verona, Mrs. Marie Mae Hamilton; and Walton, Mrs. J. L. Vest.

Lined oil and turpentine is the most lasting and practical floor finish. Miss Ida C. Hagman, specialist in Home Improvement, Extension Dept., College of Agriculture U. of Ky., told the women at the April Leaders Training Class of the Homemakers Club. Eighteen were present at the morning session to study methods of removing old floor finishes and applying new. Mrs. Howard Huey of Petersburg, was elected County Chairman of the spring project, "The Livable Home."

Women from seven clubs were present at the open afternoon meeting at the Burlington Courthouse. Miss Hagman gave a talk on "Personality of the Home." She stressed the three bones that women of the Homemakers Clubs should develop—wish bone, funny bone and back bone.

Leaders that attended the Training Class are giving the lesson "Floor Finishes," to their local clubs during the month of April.

Home Makers' Club

The Walton Homemakers Club held its April meeting at the home of Mrs. Sidney Gaines. Roll call was answered by each member giving a "Helpful Household Hint." Mrs. John L. Vest gave a very interesting report on a leaders meeting she had attended at the home of Mrs. Jake Clerk. Mrs. Bedinger and Mrs. Vest were elected as representatives of this club to a class in Millinery conducted by Miss Iris Davenport at Independence, and they gave an excellent report of this meeting, explaining how Miss Davenport took old hats and blocked them and remodeled them into the styles of the new spring hats. All members were invited to another class to be held at Burlington, and also conducted by Miss Davenport, on May 25th.

The major project of this meeting was "Home Improvement." The subject of this lesson, finishing and refinishing floors and furniture, and Mrs. John C. Bedinger demonstrated how to finish your floors and furniture and how to remove the old finish and treat the wood and re-finish it.

The minor project was in charge of Miss Gillespie, our home demonstration agent, and she gave a lesson in Exterior Beautification and gave examples in painting the home and beautifying the lawn.

Miss Logan, a State Leader, was present at this meeting and gave a very nice talk on her work in the organization and invited all members to attend the National Convention of the Homemakers Clubs to be held in Washington, D. C., at which meeting leaders from clubs all over the world will be present.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. John C. Bedinger on Friday, May 8th at 2 p. m.

The meetings of the Homemakers Clubs are very interesting and instructive and any women in Walton who are interested in this work are welcome to attend these meetings and join the club.—Pub. Chr.

Explosibility of Dusts
One of the principal factors in the explosibility of dusts seems to be the degree of fineness of the dusts, says a writer in the Washington Star. The explosion appears to be the propagation of flame through a very finely and uniformly divided dust cloud. This flame travels at a very rapid speed, building up considerable pressure, thereby producing what we ordinarily call the explosion. It has, therefore, been extremely difficult in certain instances to determine definitely when the fire ended and the explosion started. It would appear that any fire might result in an explosion if combustible dust clouds were present.

HOPEFUL CHURCH 130 YEARS OLD

About 300 Boone County Lutherans to Attend Convention
May 19 and 20

Boasting the oldest Lutheran Church in Kentucky or Tennessee, Hopeful church, Florence, and another strong synodical church, Hebron church, 300 Boone County Lutherans will be represented at a convention of the Kentucky-Tennessee Synod, May 19 and 20 in Nashville, Tenn. Rev. Howard M. Hauer, pastor of the two churches and chaplain of the synod, will attend. Whether lay delegates will attend has not been made public.

Hopeful church is 130 years old this year, but its early organization work goes back several years further to pre-date the statehood of Ky. Though the synod is young, Lutheranism in Kentucky and Tennessee is more than 130 years old. The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of the Southwest, out of which the Ky-Tenn. and several other synods grew by long processes of evolution, was founded in Louisville, 100 years ago last Oct. 9th.

When pastors rode to synod astride mules and traveled over difficult roads they were not wont to stay a more two days. Conventions were matters of several weeks.

Cooperative colleges throughout the country are seen as an evolution of the idea of Lutherans of the Ky-Tenn. parents synod. The old Synod of Southwest concerned itself early with gathering funds for a theological seminary. A prerequisite to entrance into the seminary was a requirement that the prospective preacher do at least two hours manual labor every day except Sunday.

Several years were needed to raise the $4000 with which to build the seminary. Though small in today's reckoning the sum was a goodly one in days when a pastor's annual salary was recorded as $31.50 a year. Five present-day Ky-Tenn. Synod Lutheran churches are more than 100 years old. They are Hopeful, Florence, Ky.; Jenkins, Jefferson County, Ky.; Crowell, Jenkins and Shofner, Shelbyville, Tenn.

A landmark of Lutheranism in the synod is the Louisville Lutheran Home, near Jeffersontown, once a Lutheran academy at which rumor says Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy, studied.

STATE TAX BILL FINALLY PASSED

General Assembly Adjourns After Being In Session Since Jan. 7
With Expenses Aggregating $300,000

The General Assembly adjourned Saturday, after being in session since January 7th. The new innovation taxes go into effect July 1st this year. Taxes will be more than ever before in Kentucky in the next two years.

TAX PROGRAM

Governor Chandler's balance sheet, in approximate figures looked like this, with new revenue prospects as follows:

Whiskey, retail	$2,250,000
Inheritance (increase)	500,000
Income tax	2,250,000
Drivers' license	400,000
Cigarette tax	800,000
Race tracks	200,000
Luxury taxes	2,000,000
Chain stores	200,000
Amusements	900,000
Auto sales tax	750,000
Utility sales tax	900,000
Corporations (increase)	50,000
Lubricating oil	200,000
Increase in existing taxes because of business pick-up	1,000,000
Total	$12,350,000

The whiskey tax of 26 cents a quart is in effect. The cigarette tax begins May 24. The others either have been enacted or are in process of enactment. The monthly telephone and other utilities bills will carry a 3 per cent tax, as before; whiskey carries an impose of 13 cents a pint, automobiles will be taxed 3 per cent, cosmetics, tooth powders, hair tonics all but the cheaper grades of soap will be 20 per cent.

The new taxes will catch nickle items, which the general sales tax failed to do, on such goods as soft drinks, candy bars, etc. Ice cream is taxed.

Cigarettes will carry a tax, May 24 and afterward, of 2 cents on most brands, one cent on the ten-cent varieties.

Amusements will cost their patrons a tax of 10 per cent in addition to the usual ticket charges. After this year is over, there will be an income tax to pay.

The whole bill for new state taxes will be, conservatively, $11,150,000. Official estimates run somewhat higher, but they may be discounted a little here and there to allow for the fact that revenues have failed to come up to expectations on other past occasions.

This figure compares with almost an exact amount of taxes repealed—$10,500,000 for the sales tax, a little over $600,000 for the state real estate tax.

The state received only two-thirds or $7,000,000 a year, from the sales tax, while the counties received the other third. The counties receive no direct payments from the new taxes. The tax bill for state purposes is consequently up by several millions of dollars.

Administration leaders say there will be something left over, after balancing the budget, to apply on the state's debt. There is an item of more than $1,000,000 to be added into the calculations, representing the normal increase in returns from existing tax laws. Expanding whisky production, rise in value of intangibles, mean so much "velvet" for the credit side of the state's cash ledger.

"Clothing, staple foods, furniture radios and other musical instruments jewelry and sporting goods are the principal items not taxed now that were levied upon by the general sales tax.

The next session, the fifth in all since January 1—the others having been the regular, the reorganization budget and tax sessions—will not be a general session, but will be limited to approximately five subjects. They will be: Refinancing of the state debt, liquor control, social security legislation, possibly a milk control bill. Other items may be added. Despite pleas from many members, repeal of the act conso-

DR. HILL FREED IN HOLDUP CASE

Chiropractor Dismissed at Examining Trial; Forced Into It, He Says

BOWLING GREEN, May 8.—A charge of robbery against Dr. J. A. Hill, 35, Brownville chiropractor, who told of being forced to drive a highwayman to and from a filling station hold-up, has been dismissed today following an examining trial in Warren County Court.

The story Dr. Hill told authorities at the time of his arrest was that on the night of April 18, he picked up a hitch-hiker, who threatened him with a gun and commanded him to drive to a nearby filling station, where the bandit staged a holdup, returned to the car and forced the doctor to drive away with him amid a hail of bullets fired by the proprietor of the station.

The filling station owner J. A. Floyd, filed a warrant for the chiropractor's arrest 10 days after the holdup.

HOLLYWOOD METHODS FOR HUDSON ADVERTISING PICTURES

When the modern automotive advertiser plans a campaign, he "goes on location" and "shoots his pictures" with the same painstaking care for detail as the motion picture industry. This was emphasized by W. A. James, advertising manager of the Hudson Motor Car Company, in explaining some of the intricate "behind the scenes" details involved in the preparation of up-to-the-minute advertising.

Mr. James explained how it was necessary at times to send experts thousands of miles in order to obtain just the setting needed for pictures used in advertising art. "When we were planning our Hudson Spring campaign," said Mr. James, "all Michigan was snowbound. We wanted pictures of cars amid Spring settings, and this was impossible to get in Detroit or anywhere around Michigan. In order to hurdle this difficulty, Brooke, Smith & French, our advertising counsel, sent its art director, Rodolf Crutkin, to Hollywood to get pictures amid Spring surroundings.

"Motion picture lots were used for some pictures and actresses and actors employed as models. In the taking of a picture for advertising purposes, it is necessary to get every detail correct. If we are taking a picture of a convertible coupe, for use in a Spring campaign, we must have one showing the use to which this coupe is put. We must show it with a group of laughing young people at the country club, at the beach for a bathing party or motoring along a country lane. Costumes must be correct. There must be life in the picture. This model, particularly has 'youth appeal' and we must illustrate it in the picture we plan to use.

"In the 'old days,' we merely drove a car out into the factory yard, called in a photographer, and just 'took a picture.' Today we must do more... we must have atmosphere. We plan farther ahead. The motion picture industry has shown us the way to get the atmosphere whenever we need it. We can get any 'setting' desired. If we want a 'location,' the motion picture executives know just where these 'locations' are, and we consult with them.

"In the past decade, tremendous strides have been made in the automotive industry not only from the manufacturing standpoint but from the standpoint of advertising and merchandising. The next decade will see even greater advances."

White Velvet Is Used to Take Place of Lingerie

White velvet, silk, cotton, or ribbed, often takes the place of white lingerie, pique or linen, for white touches on dark frocks, particularly black. At Donna Katorza's there is a charming collar to wear with a round-necked black frock. It is made of three rows of white velvet petals, narrow and pointed, mounted on cotton, and worn flat around the neck at the base of the throat. At Judith Barbier's (famous for her artificial flowers and neckwear) there are several new ideas in white velvet. One is a round collar with a mass of white petals, rose-petals. In front, another is made of white ribbed velvet, a round collar with a turnover triangle in front stitched in arabesques of silver thread.

SILKS TAKING LEAD FOR RESORT STYLES

Will Have Prominent Place in Spring Fashions.

Silks have a leading place in the resort and spring fashion picture. Various interpretations of the present theme, likeable silks, novelty wool-like constructions, and arresting treatments of prints give fresh impetus to American design collections. Designer demand for such silks which took the women with great drapability has brought renewed interest in crepey constructions generally, with flat surfaces the new highlight.

Silk crepes in novelty constructions, velvety silk sheers in lighter versions than the types used for fall, silk romanes, some with satin backs, sheer silk cantons, nubbed silk crepes, silk triple sheers, silk chiffon, silk sheers with fine check patterns and the types that will be seen in smart resorts.

Trade Dispute
In the Middle Ages the work of barbers and apothecaries overlapped and there was much argument between the two. The French hit upon the expedient of putting those in one trade into long robes and the other into short robes, which worked for a while.

Lice Bother to Heifers, Calves

Early Attention Is Advised to Save Animals From Losing Weight.

By Fred M. Haig, Associate Professor of Animal Husbandry and Dairying, North Carolina State College.
Cattle lice are a serious handicap to the development of calves and heifers.
When infested with lice, the young animals rub against posts and trees, wearing away their hair and irritating their skin. Sometimes the calves become thin and weak from loss of weight.

In the early spring dairymen should inspect their calves to see whether they are infested with lice. The insects are found mostly around the necks and shoulders of the animals, but they also infest other parts of the body.

The first step in eradicating lice is to clean and disinfect the stalls thoroughly. After removing the bedding and sweeping the stalls, disinfest them with a 5 per cent solution of any good coal tar disinfectant.

Allow the stalls to dry, then whitewash the interior. When the whitewash is dry place plenty of straw bedding or other clean material in the stalls.

Meanwhile, apply to the calves a solution of one ounce of sodium hyposulfite in a gallon of water. Brush it in thoroughly so that it will reach every part of the body and penetrate folds of skin.

The lice usually in a sunnier place. The lice are then easily to be placed back in the newly disinfested stalls and a second treatment will hardly be necessary unless the calves become infested again from other animals.

Good Plan to Let Garden Spot Rest for One Year

Since garden patches are generally maintained on the same spot year after year, liberal applications of manure should be given each fall and limited under to maintain fertility. In the fall the soil should be plowed and the weeds and grasses killed. In the spring the soil should be plowed and the weeds and grasses killed. In the fall, then, garden manure can be applied in the spring, or a light dressing of chicken or sheep manure can be given, even after the crops are planted. Twenty-five tons of stable manure to the acre, preferably cow manure, will keep garden soil in good condition, according to a writer in the Missouri Farmer.

Many farmers believe that too much chicken manure has been applied to farm gardens. Of all manures, chicken manure is the richest, and, lacking in bulk as compared with cow or horse manure mixed with straw, it does not leave the soil in as good condition as the other two. Heavy applications of chicken manure, which cause the plants to burn if the weather is dry. What would do many farm gardens a great deal of good would be to rotate with the plot sown to red clover. If for one year the garden vegetables could be raised on a different plot of ground, the old plot sown to red clover with the crop plowed under, a vast improvement in richness and looseness of soil would be the result.

Corn Smut

Corn smut is a fungus and is carried over from one year to another on old stalks, on refuse in manure and probably also in seed. Since the disease is not seed borne, seed treatment is useless. The collection of the smutted ears and stalks before the spores are spread will help greatly to control the trouble if it can be done. The use of smut infected manure should be avoided, and the crop should be rotated so as not to occur on the same land often than once in three or more years.

Fighting Rams of Texas

A curb on the fighting instincts of rival rams has recently been devised by Texas sheepmen. It consists of a rubber screen attached to the animal's horns and allowed to drop down over the upper line of its vision. While the ram can then see well enough to fight, it cannot see other leaders of the flock clearly enough for an efficient battle. Known as "combat blinds," the blinds are widely used throughout the sheep country of western Texas, where rival rams now graze side by side in security and peace.—New York Times.

Age to Breed Mares

As a general practice, farm mares should not be bred until they are three years old, and if it is necessary to work them hard it might be best not to breed them until they are four years old. Some well developed purebred mares lived in two-year-olds, notes a writer in the Missouri Farmer, but they are seldom worked well suiting their years to the other hand. It is not advisable to let mares get too old before they are bred or they may never raise colts.

Septic Tank Is Good Investment

Water-Tight Arrangement Is Sure to Hold Sewage—Bacterial Digestion.

By W. C. Krueger, Extension Agricultural Engineer, New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station, Rutgers College.
In early spring when the ground is saturated with water and drainage is impeded by frozen subsoil, the advantages of a septic tank or cesspool or dry pit for sewage disposal are easily recognized. Cesspools located in open gravelly or sandy soils operate freely in disposing of sewage but this free movement often causes contamination of nearby water supplies. Cesspools located in light soils soon seal themselves and become inoperative.

Septic tanks, on the other hand, are water-tight and of a size sufficient to hold the sewage long enough to insure bacterial digestion. There is a second digestion chamber where the effluent undergoes additional digestion and aeration and from this chamber it is dispersed by means of a field tile system and underdrains in areas removed from the water supply. Septic tanks will operate from four to ten years, before removal of undesirable materials becomes necessary.

Septic tanks may be purchased ready-made or they may be constructed in place. Construction does not present any difficulties to the average workman but the cost of materials for a farm-built tank is generally lower than the price of purchased units. A frequent mistake is the installation of septic tanks which are too small. Tanks should have an approximate capacity of 100 gallons per person in the family.

Pruning Peach Trees in View of Obtaining Growth

Peach trees can be pruned successfully any time during the dormant season. Some growers prefer to prune early in the fall in the belief that the wounds are well healed over by spring before the cold starts. Cultivators of the spring pruning is best owing to danger of freezing the wood during severely cold weather. Their trees, however, are hardly borne out by tests.

There is one distinct advantage to late winter pruning as compared to early winter pruning. If one knows there is no chance of getting a peach crop because of excessively low temperatures during the winter, a different method of pruning can be used than when there is a probability of having a fruit crop. If it is known that owing to extremely low temperatures there will be no fruit, the trees can be pruned more lightly with a view to obtaining a maximum of free growth, whereas if there is likely to be a peach crop, one can prune with a view of obtaining a maximum yield of peaches. At any rate, pruning should be done in time for the spraying for leaf curl. A tree that has been well pruned is much easier to spray and less spray is needed to spray it.—Missouri Farmer.

Pasturing Sheep

To pasture sheep in mature orchards is a common practice which seems generally satisfactory, says the Rural New-Yorker. The question of grazing would be the same as for any other pasture system. It would vary entirely with the kind and abundance of the pasture in question. If on good mixed grass, or blue grass, and pastured at over seven head per acre, such pasture will usually keep the ewes in good condition until pasture starts getting short in late summer or early fall.

Old Oats for Seed

Seed oats, like corn and soy beans, is disappointing this year in germination. The prolonged wet weather at harvesting and threshing last summer damaged the oats. L. B. Thatcher of the Ohio experiment station suggests that two-year-old oats may be used if the seed is in good condition, free from musty odor and has good germination. However, says a writer in the Ohio Farmer, the 1934 crop was light in weight and much of it may not be suitable for seed.

Farm Sidelights

Feeding and care determine largely how much milk a cow will give.

Dairy cattle can be fed to increase the organic iodine in their milk.

One of the severest diseases of raspberries in Pennsylvania is crown gall.

Germany has ruled that all potatoes grown there must be consumed there.

Nearly all farm horses suffer from the effects of several kinds of internal parasites.

Twenty- to six different soil types have been catalogued in Polk county, Texas, by the soil conservation service.

Seed Corn Should Have Ventilation

Careless Storage May Cause Deterioration During Cold Weather.

By P. H. Kline, Plant Breeding Agronomist, North Carolina State College.
Seed corn should be stored in a well ventilated place over the winter if it is to produce a good yield of high quality corn the following season. Careless storage of seed may so deteriorate during the winter that it cannot produce a good stand of corn.

The cars of seed corn should not be thrown together in a pile, but should be stored in such a manner that the air can circulate freely about each ear.

Given a chance to dry out thoroughly the seed will be able to withstand heavy freezes without injury. A satisfactory lumber can be placed between the cars and a couple of two-by-four uprights. The mesh of the wire should be just large enough to permit the ears to pass through easily.

The uprights should be erected at a convenient distance apart, with the broad edge set at right angles to a line drawn between the two posts. Place a horizontal wire or cord on each side of the uprights in such a manner that the complete rack resembles a double wooden wire fence, with the meshes opposite and above that of a comfortable living room, as too much heat will impair the germination power of the seed.

Manure as Top Dressing on Wheat, Winter Barley

One of the best ways of using barnyard manure during the winter months is to apply it as a light top-dressing on either wheat or winter barley. It is advisable to farm the storage room at first to facilitate the curing process, but be careful not to raise the temperature above that of a comfortable living room, as too much heat will impair the germination power of the seed.

Top-dressing these crops during the winter months at the rate of three to five tons per acre will greatly reduce the amount of winter killing on these crops. Give them an earlier start in the spring. It is a satisfactory job by hand. Where it is spread by hand, it would be well to run over the field with a harrow with the teeth set at about a 45 degree angle shortly after the snow has melted. The soil then when this leaching takes place from manure that is piled or scattered about the feed lots or barns.

Put to Death by Elephants

In medieval China criminals were sometimes put to death by elephants.

Boone County Farm Notes

H. R. Finkner, County Agent

Tobacco Plants Injured

Tobacco plant beds are being severely injured by Flea Beetles and dry weather according to many reports at the County Office.

Poison sprays and dusts are being successfully used by many growers against insect injury. Fertilizer applications according to directions are also being used to stimulate plant growth.

Extension circular on plant bed management gives recommendations on the above practices as available at the County Office on request.

Poultry Raising On the Increase
Poultry raising in Boone County is on the increase. Improved clean chick practices and ideal poultry brooding—weather is helping—most growers to have better than usual success.

Practically all large producers are now using chicks, from Bacillary White Diarrhea tested free flock, using clean ground or sun porches and following a clean management program. The recent dry weather is more ideal for successful brooding.

The largest producer in Boone County this year is J. P. Clark of near Beaver, with more than 3000 head. He is followed closely with Grant Madrox of near Florence, with slightly less than that number.

Jersey Breeders Back 4-H Show

The Boone County Jersey Cattle Club

will sponsor a special 4-H dairy calf exhibit at the county 4-H and Utopia fair this year, according to W. G. Kite, president of the County Association. Attractive premiums will be awarded calf club members making exhibits. Robert Youell, prominent Boone County Jersey breeder has been appointed as chairman of the Calf Club exhibit.

The calf club premiums will be open to all 4-H and Utopia members of the calf club. All members competing must own their heifers and be enrolled in the approved dairy project. The animals do not have to be registered, but must be sired by a purebred bull.

The club plans to spend more than $50.00 on the Calf Club exhibit. This special award will help stimulate calf club membership at a time when dairy interest is on the increase.

The next meeting of the Jersey Cattle club will be held during the State Jersey meeting at Senator P. B. Gaines' farm near Carrollton, in June.

The Soil building practices listed under Section I hereof shall be carried out in accordance with good farming practices, using such methods and such kinds and quantities of seeds, trees, and other materials as conform to good farming practices. The State Committee of each State, under supervision of the Director of the East Central Division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, will issue information applicable to such State regarding the manner of carrying out such soil-building practices and whether the adoption of any such practice on particular types of farms or in particular counties would or would not constitute good farming practice on such farms or in such counties.

Maybe Not Crazy, But a Little Strange

Transfers Int. Co. Safety Service.

This illustration may be a slight bit over done, because "our fellow human beings" may not be quite as crazy as the artist has pictured them in the above. But at least by the way the artist spells out "human beings," the inference is that he regards a good many drivers and pedestrians as "cockeyed." It sometimes drivers and pedestrians could see themselves as others see them, many would be in for some great surprises. This would be especially so when drivers do those little things which tell the wide world the kind of persons they are.

Oh wad some power the gifle gie us
To see oursel's as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,

It's a good notion for drivers to look at themselves in the looking glass once in a while to try to figure out just how they may appear to their fellow men when they drive as though they had the only car registered and no such person as a pedestrian ever existed.

THE RAILROADS CARRIED ON

The Winter of 1936—

Snow blocked the highways,
Sleet rode the airways,
Ice jammed the rivers,
but . . .

The Trains Went Through handling their human cargoes safely, carrying coal and clothing, food and medicine, to snowbound communities, to homes and hospitals and factories.

Whether the emergency be national or local . . . blizzard, hurricane, flood, drought, fire, epidemic . . . the story is always the same. In 1934 the railroads carried famished, drought suffering cattle to fertile pastures; often they move trainloads of water to parched communities; time and again free relief trains are run to disaster-stricken areas, to remove refugees, to bring the creature comforts to anguished humanity.

The cost of moving extra traffic in times of stress is high, but it is not passed on to the public. Rates and fares are never higher . . . often lower . . . sometimes waived entirely in such emergencies.

This emergency service can only be made possible through public patronage because the traffic obtained in normal times enables the railroads to provide and maintain the stand-by equipment and facilities so sorely needed when disaster strikes. And the Louisville & Nashville, like other railroads, can serve and save in emergencies only as it receives its share of business and of your patronage throughout the year.

To Be Chic Is to Be Man-Tailored

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THERE is no question as to the supremacy of the smart tailor in the early spring mode. How to wear a strictly man-tailored suit without sacrificing a prettily feminine appearance is the problem that fashion is putting up to the ladies these days. And is the fair sex proving equal to the occasion? Of course! Merely a matter of accessories. If you please. As to whether your spring tailor goes smartly manish or winsomely feminine depends for the most part on the hat, gloves, footwear, bag, belt, blouse and all the other items that go to make-up a correct ensemble.

Here is a formula for a good antidote to the masculinity of a man-tailored suit of sturdy men's wear woolens, or other wear. Wear an alluring, frilly, lingerie blouse, for after many years' absence it has come into its own for spring. About your swanky felt hat, or your equally as modish sailor hat see that your milliner ties a length of gaily colorful (sometimes several colors are used together) veiling in a big sprightly, fluttery, eye-compelling bow. Match your new fabric gloves to the color of your veil, for gloves in giddy colors are highly important news this season. Colorful hosiery, too, registers on the advance style program.

However, should you prefer that your spring outfit go dramatically masculine in every detail as do so many of the high-fashion tailors on the new style program, again may we remind you that it is for the most part a matter of choosing the proper accessories. Homage hats, shirtmaker blouses, bags that look like a business man's brief case, a tie or ascot scarf that seems as if it might belong on brother's tie-clip, pigskin gloves, the very new square-toed and square-heeled shoes, all are contributing items to manish styles. And don't forget to add conspicuously one of the swanky lately-arrived watch-fob pins.

Designers are playing up the tailored suit with many variations. The group pictured illustrates the idea. To the left the suit is a classic double-breasted type. In navy or black it carries a pointed air which best-dressed women seek. A simple linen skirt is preferably worn, although, to vary the program, it is well to have in reserve a "smart" taffeta or crepe blouse. A handbag, knicker blouse would be interesting to include in your tailored-blouse wardrobe.

Here you see one of the cunning new veils in high color mood that is accomplishing wonders in the way of counteracting too much masculinity in one's tailleur.

The suit to the right differentiates in that it has a two-button fastening. Speaking of tweeds (this promises to be a very trendy season) and the new novelty wools, words fail to do them justice. In their wealth of radiant colorings, in their unique checked and nubbed rough weaves, in their artful stripes, plaids, and diagonals they simply baffle description. The sport scarf and felt hat of the new frilly lingerie type. The sailor hat with veil is good style.

The latest call of the tailored mode is for skirt and jacket to contrast as shown in the clever suit in the foreground. Stunning color effects are worked out in this way, special attention to a discriminating selection of accessories being absolutely necessary. Note that this jacket has a one-button fastening. The blouse is of the new frilly lingerie type. The sailor hat with veil is good style.

Reed made the prayer at the Dixie Highway school and members of the Board of Education and other made short addresses; Rev. Kenneth B. Bowen, pastor of the Madison Avenue Christian church, offered prayer. Kenton county school children who were transported to the sites in school buses, sang several songs. Bowen who revived the great advantages of education and the beneficial stride education has made in the past decade. Geo. W. It is estimated there were 1,800 people present at the latter dedication.

Previous to going to the school sites the Kenton County Board of Education entertained the visiting speakers at Lang's Spanish Tavern in Covington.

"Girls" Names for Towns
When a train conductor calls "Bessie" and "Josephine" in North Dakota he is not addressing passengers by their first names. Others are Inez, Norma, Olga, Christine, Silvia, Hannah, Frances, Janet, Stella, Ella, Mary, Flora, Marion, Alice, Elizabeth, Sophia, Beulah, Kathryn, Jessie, Luverne, Juanita, Freda, Cherry and Mona.

Pressure Water System Advantage

Plan an Aid to Efficiency of Farming Operations; Great Convenience.

By E. R. Gross, Professor of Agricultural Engineering, New Jersey College of Agriculture—New Jersey Service.
Farmers who have installed pressure water systems have found that they are not only a great advantage to members of the family, but that they also help to increase the efficiency of some farming operations.

With fresh running water in the dairy barn, cows drink more water and produce more milk. Running water also adds greatly to the convenience of milk cooling and utensil washing. On poultry farms, water may be piped to each water pen or fountain in the house or to convenient places on the range.

On larger farms the pressure water system should be large enough to supply needs for fruit and vegetable washing. With auxiliary power and pumping equipment, it may even supply spraying and irrigation needs and afford considerable fire protection.

Where a water tank can be located on a hill so that the reservoir is higher than the farm buildings, a farm may be equipped with running water by a gravity water supply system.

The system should be carefully planned and effectively installed. Important considerations are the size of pump, storage tank and capacity of the well or water supply. Properly installed, the system will furnish sufficient depth to prevent freezing and stop mud and waste water where drainage is necessary.

Sow Legnedeza in Oats, Recommended by Experts
It has been amply demonstrated that winter broadcast sowing of about 125 pounds per acre is sown with oats and Korean legnedeza is grown with oats year after year, without over plowing and without any other rotation of crops. The phosphate makes up for the lack of phosphorus in most of the soils. Hence on the same field year after year a good grain feed for horses may be produced together with a fine summer and fall pasture for cows and sheep. Plowing legnedeza, says, at all times needs to be done to die the ground and drill the oats. This practice, as one can see, prevents the soil from washing practically the year around.

If pastured, it is recommended that legnedeza be grazed early, when it is 3 or 4 inches high; and if cut for hay it should be moved before the lower leaves dry and fall off. Early grazing will prevent the plant from growing tall with the foliage limited to the top of the plant—it will cause the foliage to grow near the ground as well as at the top and hence more leaves are available. — Missouri Farmer.

Fattening the Cows
If the cow is in thin flesh she should be fed six to ten pounds a day of a mixture of 300 pounds ground corn, 200 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds bran, and 50 pounds of high protein concentrates. If the cow is in good condition, 12 to 14 pounds of alfalfa hay a day, 30 pounds silage, and 2 to 4 pounds of the milking herd mixture or of a commercial fattening grain will put the cow in excellent shape. In maintaining a specific amount to feed the eye of the feeder, as in all other handling of live stock, is very important. A good feeder regulates the amount of grain fed by watching the appetite of the cow and the rate she is putting on flesh. With poorer quality hay the feeder realizes more grain and higher protein is necessary.—Florida's Dairyman.

"Mool" Handsome or Pretty?
"Mool" is a South African colloquial word for fine, handsome or pretty.

Landslide—I'll give you just one day in which to pay your rent. Boarder—Very well, I'll choose next Christmas.

She—Do you believe in love at first sight?
He—Yes, but I prefer to have a few looks.

First Pat—I understand you are going to follow law. Is that true?
Second Pat—I take an examination for the police force tomorrow.

She—How long will you give me to think over your proposal?
He—Why?
She—I want to hold it over Jack.

"Did you see anything marked down at the new department store?"
"Yes; the red elevator globes."

Mrs. Chant—Mrs. Smith's youngster is amazingly short and stout.
Mrs. Catt—I suppose you know it was raised on condensed milk.

"I think Ben is simply wonderful."
"Yes; the trouble is he thinks so, too."

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

City Life: Five young men lounging in front of an upper East side terrace clock in the morning. . . . They had a few drinks and are kidding among themselves. . . . A shuffling figure comes in. . . . One of the five men is a wisecrack. . . . It's a hot one and all laugh loudly. . . . The shuffling figure stops and draws a revolver. . . . A flash and a report and the boys have fled. . . . The shuffling one slinks away cursing.

Ten minutes later, a policeman pokes his club into the ribs of a figure slumped on a doorstep. . . . They see blood. . . . The young man dies soon after reaching the hospital. . . . And his four companions can't recall what it was that made them laugh so hard.

Busy hands: Residents of Suttons place, that swanky settlement that sprang up among the tenements fronting on East river, rubbed their eyes. . . . It's 15 years or more, the four-faced clock on the tower of the old brewery between Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth hadn't run. Nevertheless, the hands were moving. . . . They were showing the correct time however. . . . At intervals, some moved forward and some backward. It really was a bit funny. Investigation disclosed the fact that fear of the owners would fall down and injure someone, the police had removed them. Thus, the hands were playthings of the breeze.

Ghetto glimpse: Those crows blowing the feathers of live chickens . . . to determine something or other. . . . An old man, with a shawl about his frail shoulders, regarding the passing throngs with deep-set, smoldering eyes. . . . Men housewives looking at fish swimming in tanks. . . . Tenement mothers shouting down orders to children from upper windows. . . . Washes flapping high above littered court yards. . . . A push cart pickie vendor crying his wares. . . . A white-headed ancient trundling a little hand organ on a dismounted baby carriage. . . . A bearded patriarch reading by the light of a flickering candle. . . .

Harassed Citizens: "Having made my peace with the government—about I paid the first quarter and am trusting to look it scrape up the other three—now I find that the state of New York will have to be dealt with. . . . Whether I designed the blank for the Empire State's income tax must have been the originator of coles used during war times. I haven't the slightest idea how to fill out. . . . But I give enough to know that I owe the state and owe plenty. I'm wondering if I couldn't arrange with Uncle Sam and Governor Lehman to take over my salary and allow me enough to live on. I'd be better off all around and wouldn't have to fill out those forms. Very respectfully, John S. S." Sounds good to me!

Mike fright: George M. Cohan, according to his own declaration, does not care for radio. That is, he does not care to go into radio steadily. He has a number of reasons. One is that he's heard friends use material that showed how much of a grind radio really is for the performer. Another is that he—though the author of more than half a hundred plays or maybe a hundred since he's lost count—hasn't the slightest idea of how to prepare a radio script. Then there's the microphone. He's been facing audiences for many years now and feeling quite natural while doing it. But a microphone makes him nervous!

Service: On the edge of the fashionable upper east side section is a shop that makes shoes to match costumes. All the patrons have to do is bring in the cloth and the shoe maker will do the rest. On Fifth avenue, there is an establishment that makes bags to "accompany any costume" at a charge of $15. The depression really is at an end.

The Land-Locked Salmon
Scientists consider the landlocked salmon to be a direct descendant of the sea salmon. It is supposed that some time in the far distant past, sea salmon who entered the waters, from choice or necessity, failed to return to the ocean but remained in fresh water where they became stunted in size but retained most of the other characteristics of the Atlantic salmon.

Hens in Egg Race to Cackle on Radio
Dallas, Texas.—The hens entered in the international egg-laying contest at the Texas Central exposition probably won't understand or care, but their nests will be wired for sound. Also for publicity. The hens will settle to their task June 1. When the first egg drops into the super-comfortable nests which the exposition will provide a huzzar will sound and an attendant will hurry with the hensery with a microphone, and the hen's cackling will be picked up for a waiting radio audience.

Narwhal Carries Spear—Among the natural weapons possessed by animals none is more formidable in appearance than the spear of the Arctic narwhal, which is really a much elongated tooth of a specially-twisted ivory. These spears may be as much as eight feet in length, which is approximately half the body length of the largest narwhal. Menacing as its true service, however, its true service is its own remains a matter of doubt, though males have been observed to cross spears. It has been suggested that the weapon may be of service against some large enemies or to break breathing holes in the thick ice.

TASTIER VIRTUALS OBJECT OF SURVEY

Nation's Palate Gets Attention of Government.

Washington, Juicer, steamlined Thanksgiving and Christmas turkeys . . . plumper and tastier . . . eggs containing more of good old vitamin A . . . beefsteaks and lamb chops that really melt in your mouth . . .

These month-virtuals—and a lot more—achieved through applying modern scientific knowledge to spin on and help Mother Nature produce in a bigger and better way, are now promised the average American eater by the Department of Agriculture.

Reckling added appropriations from Congress to carry out the department's experimental work, livestock experts revealed a few of the numerous projects now being carried on to add to the nation's gastronomic delicacies.

Dr. H. C. McPhee, chief of the division of animal husbandry, painted a verbal picture of the turkey of the future.

"The ideal type of turkey raised by most growers," Doctor McPhee explained, "is a long-legged, large-bodied, slow-growing bird, whereas the one I would like to see is a short-legged, early-maturing type that will be in good flesh condition for the Thanksgiving and Christmas markets. Research work to develop such a type is an important part of the turkey project work."

And for all who still pull a wish-bone-for-good-luck, Doctor McPhee points up being conducted show that proper feeding and properly constructed pens will prevent crooked kneecaps in the Thanksgiving fowl.

Major aspects of poultry-breeding experiments, Doctor McPhee said, are to improve the weight and quality of eggs, including special feeding to increase the vitamin A content, and to increase the number of eggs laid by each hen.

"At the Agricultural department's 'Chemistry' (M.F.) laboratories the 'chemistry' is an study to develop tastier meats and, through bacteriological tests, make steaks and chops juicier and more tender."

At the department's efforts are concentrated on improvement of pork as a meat.

Then two large carpet snakes were appointed with food, feeding and other emoluments. By day they slept in the rafters of the store; by night they worked.

In an incredibly short time every rat disappeared. So, now, have the snakes. No one knows where, but Thursday Island has deleted the "on" from its pestling prospects.

Plays in Church Called "Better Than Sermons"

Melbourne, Australia.—A church in Melbourne is to be used as a regular "theater" for religious plays if plans made by its vicar succeed. He is Father R. E. Maynard, vicar of St. Peter's church.

"People may get a greater message from seeing an appropriate religious play than from hearing many sermons," he pronounced, "Drama," he added, "can be used for the teaching of the Christian message far more effectively than at present."

Monkey Must Die

London.—A monkey which, among many other accomplishments, can write its name in three languages, but is unfortunately addicted to drink, was condemned to death at the London Sessions. In a drunken rage it attacked and injured a boy.

Find Pep Supplied by Adrenal Glands

Cleveland.—Five months of research work in the heart of Africa has produced sufficient evidence to verify a theory that the adrenal glands, small ductless bodies above the kidneys, are the "pep regulators" for the entire animal kingdom, including human beings.

This was the conclusion of two prominent Cleveland physicians, Dr. George W. Crite, head of the Cleveland Clinic foundation, and Dr. D. F. Quirling, member of the clinic staff, upon their return from the expedition. The evidence which they believe verifies their theory is that the physical energy of all animals depends on the size of the adrenal glands was obtained after dissecting more than 200 animals, ranging from chimpanzees to elephants.

Improvement of Pasture Is Easy

Wild White Clover Will Do the Trick, Says Expert in Agronomy.

By Prof. D. B. Johnson-Wallace, Cornell Agronomy Department—Wild Service.

Growing two blades of grass where one grew before is a simple matter. Even better results have been achieved. Experiments by Cornell show that four blades of grass and two leaves of wild clover can be grown where one blade of grass and one leaf of devil's-palat-brush grew before.

On pasture improvement is not an expensive process. An effective program should not exceed two dollars a year for each cow kept on the farm, or its equivalent in other animals.

The essentials of pasture improvement are: an adequate supply of phosphorus in the soil by liberal applications of superphosphate; the use of time, in addition, on very acid soils; and sometimes potash on light, sandy soils.

More important even than fertilization is the management of grazing. Improved pastures should be grazed closely and should not be permitted to exceed four inches in height at any time. Ungrazed herbaceous areas must be plowed every year or more during the grazing season.

The combination of fertilization and close grazing results in the development of a dense stand of wild white clover and valuable pasture grasses.

Pale Butter in Demand

In Markets of the East

Danger to Middle western dairy farmers is seen in the increasing demand in eastern markets for "pale" or "clarified" butter. Pale butter is produced in northern countries such as Canada and Latvia, where cows get a minimum of green pasture and hay cured to a green color. Not much butter is produced in this country to satisfy the increasing demand, says the Pacific Farmer.

Canine is responsible for the natural yellow color of western and southern butter. Green pasture and hay cured to a green color are a condition of the part of the year, the butter always has a deep yellow color.

The Middle West's natural yellow butter is worth more money than pale butter because of its higher nutritional value. To the farmer of the Middle West who supplies the cream from which 50 per cent of the butter produced in this country is made, the trend toward increased consumption of pale butter in eastern markets is of vital importance.

Rubber Beats Steel

Rubber tires have scored another victory over steel in tests made by 14 experiment stations and summarized by the United States Department of Agriculture. The score was "80 per cent in favor of low-pressure pneumatic tires over steel tires for wheel tractors of the general-purpose type in the performance of numerous routine draft operations of the average farm under favorable soil conditions."

The states ranged from California to Ohio and from Michigan to Texas. The rubber-tired tractors pulled better and saved fuel, did not perform well without clanking, mud or wet soil. It was found better to have a pressure of only 10 pounds in rear tires, while 20 pounds worked best for front wheels. Estimates place number of rubber-tired tractors in use in United States at more than a million. The Country Home.

Water in Grain and Hay

Water constitutes a higher percentage of both grain and roughage than is commonly realized. Best grades of mature, well-cured corn, wheat, oats, barley and rye all contain approximately 10 per cent water, while lower grades of new corn frequently carry as much as 20 per cent of water. This means, says the Rural New Yorker, that on at least one out of every ten cars of corn shipped we are paying freight for a carload of water; well-cured hay, straw and fodder also contain an average of about 10 per cent water, while fresh green roughage and grass average about 70 per cent, and in many instances considerably higher. Corn silage from well-natured corn has an average content of over 70 per cent moisture, with roots average nearer 80 per cent.

Purebred Live Stock

There is only one justification for purebred live stock. That is to improve commercial flocks to better meet consumptive needs. So far as sheep are concerned there is a dual objective, mutton and wool. There is opportunity here then to breed animals specializing in either carcass or fleece and also for animals combining, so far as possible, these two objectives. Variation in type by purebred breeders can only be commended where such variations are made with the view of more nearly meeting present or future market requirements.—The Sheep Breeder.

Out on the Burlington pike, at the pleasant and hospitable home of Mrs. Chester Tanner and her mother Mrs. Tennie Beemon; the ladies aid and the W. M. U. were delightfully entertained in May. The numbers and friends look forward to their annual meeting there. Twenty-two members responded to the roll call and there were many visitors, whom we have learned to love and claim as our very own. There was not a very good feeling between Cooper and Stewart, and about 11 o'clock Stewart went into Scott's saloon to get a relative to go home. Stewart caught hold of his relative's arm, and Cooper, who was standing near by, caught hold of the other arm. Stewart told him to let go. Cooper ran his hand into one of his pockets, and without taking aim, fired at Stewart, the bullet passing through his heart, causing instant death. Cooper escaped and was not caught until a year afterward in Tennessee.

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE LUTHERN CHURCH

Lutherans In Convention At Nashville, Tennessee

Nashville, Tenn., May 21.—Lutherans of the Kentucky-Tennessee Synod of the United Lutheran church in convention here this week today adopted a resolution "condemning the glorification of vice, scandal and divorce, found too often in the press."

Rev. Frank O. Tafel, Louisville, presented the resolution which was attacked on the floor of the convention by Charles W. Payne, Cincinnati, Ohio, newspaperman, a delegate to the convention, who said in part:

"Newspapers in the past few years especially have made a wholehearted effort to combat crime, divorce and vice evils. In few if any instances have these things been glorified. Your action attacks one of the fundamentals of American government—freedom of the press. Unless the spotlight of the American press is turned glaringly upon these evils the public is not cognizant of their presence and can do nothing to combat them."

"Much of the success of the German can be attributed to the fact that newspapers have heartily cooperated in playing up the sordid side of criminality. In every possible instance pictures of notorious criminals being taken to jail or even pictures of criminals upon the marriage slab of the undertaker have been printed."

"This is not glorification. However, if your condemnation were justified, readers' literary appetites are not the fault of the press. Newspapers give the people exactly the type of news they demand. It is the church's duty—not the newspaper's to cultivate Christian tastes and desires among its members."

"Education on the merits of proper liquor control, control which would regulate the industry in relation to the public welfare" was advocated by the church body.

Emphasis was given also, to recommendation of Rev. Tafel, to reconstructing in our spiritual education the inclusive elements that will unite our country on the constitution so that religious and secular liberty may be perpetuated."

After lengthy discussion a suggestion that the synod "favor any practical legislative plan in taking care of the needy and aged" was tabled.

Supporting such action was Rev. Ira Ladd, Louisville, who said "the state has been compelled to encroach upon this work of the church because the church has failed in its task. It is the duty of the church to support any activity of the state which attempts something in which the church has failed. Our failure is a serious reflection on our Christianity."

Rev. Homer Lindsay, Louisville, opposed the suggestion on the ground that the Lutheran church has been respected for "staying out of politics and should not dabble in such issues."

Rev. J. Earl Spaid, Louisville, president of synod, opposed the suggestion on the ground that a "practical legislative plan might even mean the Townsend plan, since many thousands seem to think that plan practical."

Responsibility for social justice was laid at the doorstep of the church by C. C. Menzer, superintendent of the Tennessee Industrial School, who addressed the convention, said in part:

"Social security must be in the form of proper stability to youth. The church must give youth that or it will not be done."

"The problem of crime is the problem of youth, J. Edgar Hoover of the Bureau of Investigation has estimated that 150,000 murderers walk our streets and will strike down 350,000 of us this year. He adds that many of these assassins will be recruited from the ranks of youth."

"The responsibility is on the church. The social teachings of Christ place in them. Prohibitive acts on the statute books can not do the job. It must be done in the home and community."

"Your rights as Lutherans imply that you have a concept of right and wrong, that you will stand always for right living and right citizenship."

"Our motto is service, a superlative service. We are designated to bring about certain things. The first of these is social justice, the right to the boy and girl to be born right."

The Crow Pest and How to Exterminate

Unique Manner Explained By James B. Walker of Covington

Some time ago the Advertiser office was visited by James B. Walker, antique dealer of Main street Covington. We were entertained for half an hour by this versatile and humorous gentleman in a flow of humorous methods of how farmers can rid themselves of crows. Now crows, as is generally known, by farmers, at corn planting time, will assemble in great numbers in the newly planted fields and follow row after row of the planted grain, digging it up with their feet and beaks, compelling the irate farmer to go over the field and replant the corn.

Mr. Walker said the best method to get rid of the pests is to find a crow's nest where the mother bird is hatching out its young. Then you get a cat, get a piece of gunny sack or piece of canvas large enough to go around the body of the cat cutting holes in the material for the legs of the animal to protrude around the cats body (but not tight enough to strangle the cat) so it cannot escape from the harness.

Hang the cat in a tree near the crow's nest. It is then that the fun begins to happen. The mother and dad bird begin to talk.

The mother says: "Go for help quick; don't you see that cat? She will soon have your children. Go out and assemble all the clan and bring them here, and kill that abominable cat."

"You can bet your sweet life I will gather the clan, and we will kill that d---n cat," says the daddy crow. Off he flies all over the section, spreading the alarm to other crows, who respond immediately, and in a short time all the crows for miles around, assemble at the nest, screeching all the time and pecking at the unfortunate cat who cannot escape the deadly onslaught though it wails and wiggles.

It is then that the farmers with loaded shotguns begin their work on the crows. The crows will fly far away, returning to wreak vengeance on their enemy, all can be killed, if the farmers are good marksmen and their ammunition holds out.

Mr. Walker said if there was no cat available, he can draw the crows to any certain point by calling them. He asked him to give us an illustration and he gave us one. It was a crow with "Caw, caw, caw."

It was very amusing and entertaining. He is an expert shot with a gun and some time ago went down in Gallatin county on a crow hunt and killed 168 crows in one day.

Last week while driving his auto a friend, two armed thugs ran out in the street and ordered him to stop. Instead he "stepped on the gas" and the men had to jump quickly to escape being run over, the thugs cursing him lustily.

Yes, sir, Jim Walker is in a class by himself.

Fritter—You look like a nice, sensible girl. Surely you will marry me? Sue—Oh, no. I am just as sensible as I look.—Pathfinder

People Who Are Old Some people at eighty are actually younger, physically, than others at sixty or even forty. People who are really old are those whose bodies are no longer so strong or whose minds are no longer so active as they were, people who with their years have become worn, infirm, disabled or sick. For people in middle life or later, who are merely "not so active as they were," the answer may be different.

SPARTA

GALLATIN COUNTY

Mrs. Mary E. O'Connor

Thursday, May 21st, the Grim Reaper, Death, plucked his cold, icy finger upon the heart of one of Sparta's oldest citizens and bade it be still and the spirit of Mrs. Mary E. O'Connor passed to its eternal home.

Mrs. O'Connor was 80 years of age, and for many years had been a resident of Sparta. She had been in poor health for some time and had closed up her home and spent the past 7 months in the home of her daughter Mrs. Fred Grimes where she received every attention that could be given.

On Thursday morning as the purple dawn of another day was being ushered in, the spirit of this good mother winged its flight back to the God that gave it. In early life she was married to Cornelius O'Connor, who, when a boy, emigrated from Ireland. To this union were born five children—three sons and two daughters. These were: Mrs. Fred Grimes of Sparta, and Mrs. Clara Kidd of deceased. She also reared two of her granddaughters Mrs. Ralph Bond and Constance Lavelle. She was a good mother and kind neighbor, devoted to her family and lived an unassuming life, whose household duties were dear to her heart.

The funeral was held Saturday from St. Joseph church of which she was a member, by Rev. Father Connolly and the remains laid to rest in the church cemetery. The pallbearers were her three sons, Thomas, Cornelius, Owen, a brother Richard Wheeler, and two grandsons August E. O'Connor and Ralph Bond. The family has the sympathy of the entire community in the loss.

John Barnes

The death angel visited our little village Monday, and took another of Sparta's oldest landmarks in the form of one of the towns oldest and most humble servants, John Barnes, a highly respected old colored man 86 years of age. John came here many years ago from Lebanon, Ky. and served as porter for the famous Kelly Hotel and by courtesy and honesty gained the confidence and respect of his white brethren. He was a member of the Catholic church. Wednesday, request high mass was sung by Father Connolly over the remains, after which the body was buried in the Colored cemetery at Park Ridge. Father Connolly went out to the cemetery and blessed the grave.

Theresa Adeline Gex

It is with profound sorrow we chronicle the sad and tragic death of Theresa Adeline Gex, the young wife of William R. Gex, who perished in the flames of the burning home on the fatal morning of May 24, while attempting to rescue her mother and father. "No greater love hath no man, who lays down his life for another." France had her Joan of Arc, and England her Edith Cavell, but no greater heroine were either, than the subject of this sketch, who leaped into the burning flames in a futile attempt to rescue her beloved mother and father and perished with them. "Babe" as she was so familiarly known was the youngest of a family of five daughters, born August 22, 1910, a graduate of the class of 1927 of Warsaw High School and Nazareth Academy. She was married to Wm. R. Gex in January, 1934, with a bright future before her, down the stream of life surrounded by friends, adored by her parents and idolized by her young husband, makes it beyond human comprehension why she was called from this life. Mrs. Gex was of an unassuming nature, kind, sweet and gentle, and possessing all the noble traits of character that go to make up beautiful young womanhood, and passed from time to time to fulfill the work of the Lord, best friend to himself, and what we find so hard to bear is love most true. This brings to mind the lines of Longfellow, "shall I have naught that is fair said he, have naught but the bearded grain?"

The Reaper saw fit to take the flowers as well as the bearded grain thus the beautiful lines are brought to mind. The cradle means the coffin and the coffin means the grave. The mothers sorrow sears your may call the fairest roses any. May I dare yeve gave, but they wither while you near them ere the ending of the feast. The many friends of the heartbroken young husband wish to extend their heartfelt sympathy to the true God in his goodness may guide him still his grief.

Nannie Riley Maddin

When the hand of death thrust itself into the community and removed from the midst of us one of Gallatin county's most dearly beloved christian women Nannie Maddin whose useful life was snuffed out in the flames that destroyed the home of the children and relatives left to mourn the loss. The second daughter of Patrick and Mollie Riley, born at Verona, Ky., 1878, married to Martin Maddin in 1900, she was a devout member of St. Joseph Catholic church, Warsaw, a member of the choir and of the altar society.

She never forgot waiting in the performance of her duty. These dear daughters left behind her leaves a legacy of far more value than gold, the legacy of a well spent life. The golden lessons she taught them should be a consolation throughout life. She will be greatly missed in the community and in the church where she lived and attended and has left her foot-prints on the sands of time.

Martin Maddin

The death of Martin Maddin removes from Gallatin county, one of the most beloved and highly respected citizens of this community. He bore a name which has been prominent in the civic, social and religious life of Gallatin county for a quarter of a century. Wherever vigor and unswerving honesty of purpose in public affairs are admired and wherever fearlessness, the will to serve and the capacity to get results, inspire admiration, the sudden and untimely death of this good man causes deep and poignant sorrow not mere regret. In the wide circle of his acquaintances Mr. Maddin by his kindness and virility of character that were obvious in his mien inspired warm affection. No man of his aims and ability has within a generation so endeared himself to those who were so fortunate to be in contact with him. It could be said of him "in every storm of life he was oak and rock, in sunshine he was vine and flower." He was an ideal husband and father, a highly useful member of the community, faithful in business, and lived the same common placed every-day life of the rank and file, but lived that life in a better fashion than most men do.

So cheerful kind and sympathetic that it just seems that when the Lord becomes blue and sorrowful about the conditions of mans sin, he takes Martin Maddin to cheer him, so to speak. When we heard that the genial soul had past into eternity, the entire county came out to pay homage to the deceased, and extended their sympathies to the grief stricken family.

"Jimmy says that hospital was built at his expense."

"Yes; when his rich uncle died he left Jimmy $1,000 and the remainder of his fortune to the hospital."

Model Electric Kitchen

At Independence and Burlington

Homemakers of Boone and Kenton counties will have a chance to see the kitchen of their dreams, Friday and Monday, when the Community Public Service Company displays its mammoth electric kitchen coach at Burlington and Independence.

Built like a Colonial cottage, with green shutters and gay curtained windows, the coach contains an ultra-modern kitchen, scientifically designed to save work and at the same time provide an atmosphere of beauty and sparkling cleanliness. Not an inch of space is wasted. Built in steel cabinets, with stainless steel work tops, connect the electric range and refrigerator on one side of the kitchen. A large metal sink with roomy drainboard and built-in electric dishwasher, occupies the other side. Overhead cabinets provide a place for canned goods and breakfast food. Even the doorways contain built-in compartments with space for storing mops, brooms and various other kitchen articles.

Everything is arranged for convenience and speed in the preparation of food. The sink is but a step from either the range or the refrigerator. Plenty of table space is provided on both sides of the range. There are drawers for utensils in the range, as well as in the cupboards that flank it. Dirty dishes go right into the dishwasher, where they are cleaned by sprays of hot water. A ventilating fan over the range carries away food odor. Walls are washable and all cabinet work is finished in enamel, making it as easy to clean as a china dish. The metal metal drain and cabinet tops are stainless and rustproof.

The coach is equipped with a deluxe electric range that does everything but prepare the ingredients for the various dishes. It is equipped with a control device that turns the oven on at a predetermined hour, cooks the food and then turns the oven off, all without attention on the part of the housewife. A Kelvinator, electric food mixer, waffle iron, toaster, coffee-maker and cooler complete the cooking equipment. All electrical appliances will be connected and in operation.

The kitchen coach is being brought to Boone and Kenton counties by Community Public Service Company in order to give local homemakers a chance to see a reproduction of a modern all-electric kitchen of the type that is advocated by leading home economists, architects and industrial designers. It will serve as a guide to those who are contemplating the modernizing of their present kitchens or planning to build new homes.

Animals for Slaughter

All animals intended for home slaughter should be in good health, and reasonably fat, says a Minnesota university authority. At packing plants, government inspectors see that no diseased animals go to food, but farmers must use their own judgment. Meat from a thin animal is usually tough and an unpalatable. Many well-fed animals that have been gaining and possess some flesh will produce good quality meat. The fat animals produce the tender meat. Animals should be neither too old nor too young.

In the Feed Alley

Molasses is often a very useful feed for pigs.

Males weigh 100 to 120 pounds to the gallon.

Apple-growers find that waste apples yield calcium phosphate, used in molasses.

There are approximately 32,000 acres of cultivated land in the United States.

Over 400,000 bushels of wheat were produced last season by colonists in the Matanuska valley of Alaska.

IN LOVING MEMORY

Of Martin Maddin and Family Who Lost Their Lives May 17

This entire community was deeply grieved as well as shocked last week by the news of the almost unbelievable tragic deaths of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Maddin and daughter Mrs. W. R. Rex.

Mr. Maddin, who was president of the Gallatin County Mutual Insurance Company, secretary and treasurer of the Gallatin County National Farm and Loan Association, and agent for the Federal Land Bank of Louisville, was the eldest son of Mrs. Mary and the late Richard Maddin of Verona. He was reared in Boone county, where he will long be held in loving remembrance by a host of friends.

The greater part of his manhood, however, was spent in Gallatin county, where he lived since he married, when the lives of his family were lost.

Never was there a more loving obedient son or a more tender and dutiful husband and father than Mr. Maddin. His naturally kindly and jovial disposition won the confidence and esteem of all with whom he came in contact. Many a weary heart has been lightened by his pleasant smile and cheery words.

Mrs. Maddin was a model of all motherly virtues and together they well exemplified the ideal christian father and mother.

Mrs. Gex, whom her many friends called "Babe" because she was the youngest of the family, was universally loved for her sweet, quiet and thoughtful disposition. Her true nobility of character and her tender solicitude for her parents are forcefully revealed by the fact that she sacrificed her own life in a vain attempt to save her father and mother.

Three daughters survive Mr. and Mrs. Maddin. Mrs. Oliver Wilson of Sparta; Mrs. Edw. Moyer of near Warsaw; and Mrs. Victor Ellis of Cement. They had five grandchildren.

Besides his mother, Mr. Maddin leaves two brothers, George Maddin of Union, Ky., and Patrick Maddin of Beaver Lick, and three sisters, Mrs. Jerry Dempsey, Ludlow; Mrs. Thos. Ryan, Verona, and Mrs. Russell Ryan, Walton.

Mrs. Maddin leaves three brothers, Joseph and Patrick Riley of near Sparta, and Orville Riley of Newport, and three sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth McCormick of near Verona; Mrs. Katherine Gard of Newport; and Mrs. Thos. Weldon of Indiana.

After requiem high mass in the presence of a very large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends the earthly remains were laid to rest as the three devoted persons had lived and had died—together.

Curious Plant

One of the most curious plants in the world is the red squill, which is found growing wild in the hills bordering the Mediterranean sea. There are two varieties—red and white. The white is used in human medicine. The red squill has all the properties of the white, and in addition it contains active toxic constituents which are not fully understood. It is these unknown constituents which make it one of the most remarkable rat poisons known.

NEW U. S. BUILDINGS TO SUIT LOCALITY

Washington.—Three basic architectural designs account for the simplicity and beauty of lines of the hundreds of federal post office buildings now springing up all over the United States.

The depression and the Public Works administration have made new post office buildings as common as "little red schoolhouses" once more. The procurement division of the Treasury department has awarded 750 construction contracts since February 14, 1930. A great majority of these have been for post offices. Several hundred remain to be built.

The outward appearances of these structures are almost as diversified as the contracts are numerous. Yet they all trace their origin back to three basic designs: The colonial, found most frequently in the Atlantic seaboard area; the contemporary or modern, found in all communities of the country, and the Spanish or mission type, in the Southwest.

Local Scenes Studied.

"This is not an attempt to make 'canned' architectural drawings or designs," one of the chief architects of the procurement division explained. "It is an attempt to make the post office buildings fit or blend into their surroundings as if they had grown up out of the ground in their respective localities—in short, local products."

The procurement division has developed scores of designs of each type of architecture used. In some localities where two types of architecture prevail, a post office building in which both types are blended may be constructed.

In considering plans for a post office building in any city or town there are three basic requirements which we must take into account," an architect explained. "We must consider the total floor space required or likely to be required in the reasonably near future in that locality by the government. We must take into account the historic or traditional type of architecture in that locality. We must also consider climatic conditions."

Space Requirement Survived.

Space requirements by the government have been carefully surveyed in every city and town of the United States. A "space control" department has been set up within the procurement division to inventory these space requirements and the space available. This "space control" department slots the space occupied by government bureaus and agencies throughout the country.

"We have found," the architect explained, "that when we take the three basic requirements for post office buildings in two or three hundred cities, itemize them on cards and shuffle those cards thoroughly, they fall into a comparatively few designs. From these basic designs we have worked out a multitude of designs and types which fit virtually any requirement."

Gen. Ludendorff Still Denouncing Hindenburg

Munich.—Gen. Erich Ludendorff, seventy years old, is still fighting the past war and denouncing his former chief, Von Hindenburg, while those in charge of modern armies are getting ready for the next conflict.

In a letter filed with vituperative strictures upon the dead Von Hindenburg, Ludendorff asserts that Germany's late field marshal-president was in reality his (Ludendorff's) subordinate.

Ludendorff's anger was aroused by a book review of his recent work, "The Total War." The review was written by Lieut. Gen. August von Cramon in the "Autreicht," a sort of house organ of the Hohenzollern family.

Von Cramon had quoted the following as coming from Hindenburg when he discussed his breach with the former quartermaster-general:

"I forgot everything that Ludendorff has done to me after the war; until my last breath I shall remain grateful to him for the service he rendered me as my first assistant."

To this Ludendorff replies: "I reject these words in the sharpest terms possible. I have rendered no services to Gen. von Hindenburg. I wasn't his 'employee.' I reject the expression 'assistant' and refer to the events attendant upon the selection of the highest commander who was placed at my side and not I at his. He was my assistant (and I not his)."

A CRYING SHAME

The Negligence of Some Who Have Neglected Graves in the Cemetery

Looking over the Walton Cemetery one is appalled at the neglected conditions of many lots in this "City of the Dead." Rank weeds and vegetation, tombstones toppling over in some instances and not a flower of tribute to the memory of the departed ones by their relatives. This is a sad commentary on the lack of love and attention. This is one reason many bury their dead in fashionable or high priced lots in the larger cemeteries. Just a small expenditure on these neglected graves and the local cemetery would be a place of beauty and a loving tribute to the departed ones. However, quite a number who reside in distant states have their family lots cared for.

DECORATION DAY

As is usual, many former citizens of Walton, were here Decoration Day to visit the cemetery and lay flowers on the graves of their loved ones. The two banks were closed but other business houses kept open. A continuous stream of automobiles passed through town to points in the interior of the state. Most of our citizens spent the day quietly at home.

CURIO CAR HERE FRIDAY

Friday, there appeared on Main street, an ancient looking automobile with a varied assortment of curios of all kinds; license tags for automobiles from the four corners of the globe—even one from Iceland—and we did not know automobiles were used in Iceland unless they traveled on runners. Deer horns, buffalo horns, ancient firearms, torture irons for convicts, in fact other ancient relics that were in existence hundreds of years ago. The car was covered with these relics, on the sides, front, top and running board and interior. The spectators were not charged but could make a free will contribution if they were so disposed. The man in charge had traveled over the greater part of the United States and Mexico and on the sides and ends of the car was painted many of the towns and cities visited. It was well worth seeing and contributions generous.

Dr. and Mrs. B. W. Stallard, Mrs. W. O. Rouse and Mrs. Gertrude Baker motored to Danville, Ky., on Sunday, where they met Dr. Stallard's daughter Miss Manell Stallard who returned home with them.

WALTON-VERONA HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT

Was a Most Interesting and Pleasing Event and Largely Attended

The Walton-Verona High School Commencement last Thursday night was a most enjoyable and entertaining event. The school auditorium was practically filled and the stage was beautifully decorated with flowers. Musicians from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music furnished the music. After two numbers by the musicians, Rev. T. L. Woollen, pastor of the Baptist church, delivered the invocation.

One of the outstanding features of the commencement was the splendid address by Hon. John Young Brown of Lexington. It abounded with splendid ideas advanced as to what made good citizenship and the well being of all. He said in his introductory remarks he would not give advice to the students, that their own common sense would direct them. His entire address was instructive, pleasing and humorous.

Prof. Raymond W. Beavly, principal of the school, presented the graduates with their diplomas in a few well chosen words. The graduates were Mary Jo Shearer, Mary Hoffman, Eloise Mayhugh, Beulah Lusby, Norman Locke, Morris Arnold, Theodore Locke, and Willis Cleek. At the same time Prof. Beavly presented Eloise Mayhugh and Beulah Winans with scholarship awards. At the close, Rev. D. E. Bedinger pronounced the benediction.

WARSAW BAPTIST PASTOR RESIGNS

Was One of the Most Popular Pastors in That Town

Rev. W. M. Smith, formerly of Boone county, who has been pastor of the Warsaw Baptist church for almost ten years, closed his work here the latter part of May and he with his family moved to their home near Burlington, Ky.

It is with much regret, both on the part of Rev. Smith and family, and also the whole community that they are leaving this field.

Rev. Smith and his wife have labored faithfully here many years as only folks of their type could.

The church membership being practically doubled, the Sunday School and work in general making much progress.

It has been said, to have friends we must ourselves be friendly.

We know of no other expression that would fit their lives better, for they probably came in touch with more people through out Gallatin county than any other pastor and his wife in its history, doing evangelistic work, visiting those in need or distress and using their influence for the betterment of the community.

We trust the Lord may still use them in another field in a much greater way.

THE IMMORTAL GEO. D. PRENTICE

Editor of the Louisville Courier, One of the Greatest Editors That Ever Lived

(Warsaw Independent In 1897)

We copy the following article from one of the old Independent, a paper published by D. B. Wallace at Warsaw, Ky.:

"Men seldom think of the shadow that falls across their own path, riding forever from their eyes the traces of the loved ones whose living smiles were the sunlight of their existence. Death is the great antagonist of life and the cold thought of the tomb is the skeleton of all feasts. We do not want to go through the dark valley, although its path may lead to Paradise; and, with Charles Lamb, we do not want to lie down in the muddy grave, even with kings and princes for our bedfellows. But the flat of nature is inexorable. There is no appeal of relief from the great law which dooms us to the dust. We flourish and we fade as leaves of the forest; and the flowers that bloom and withers in a day has not a frailer hold upon life than the mightiest monarch that ever shook the earth with his footsteps. Generations of men appear and vanish as the grass, and the countless multitudes that throng the world today will tomorrow disappear as the footsteps on the shore. In the beautiful drama of 'Ion' the instinct to immortality, so eloquently uttered by the death-devoted Greek, finds a deep response in every thoughtful soul. When about to yield his young existence as a sacrifice to Fate, his beloved Cleopatra asks if they shall meet again, to which he replied: 'I have asked that dreadful question of the hills that look eternal; of the streams that flow forever; of the stars among whose aureole fields my raised spirit has walked in glory. All were dumb. But while I gazed upon thy face, I feel that there is something in the love that mantles through thy beauty that cannot perish. We shall meet again, Cleopatra.'"

Hotel Proposed For Dry Ridge

Another Effort Will Be Made to Raise Capital to Erect a Modern Hotel

Since the destruction of the Carlsbad Hotel, Dry Ridge, numerous efforts have been made to build another hotel. Dry Ridge, as is known has several mineral springs that are said to have curative properties for numerous ailments of the human family.

At one time Dry Ridge enjoyed a large patronage at its springs resorts, but for some reason or another the venture did not realize the money anticipated. In all probability the lack of good management was the main reason.

NET JACKET-FROCK

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here is a very advanced costume. It is a smart afternoon ensemble, one of a group of English fashions shown at the spectacular Lacey ball held recently in New York. Not only was a style revue of lace fashions staged in a gorgeous setting, but the majority of the guests and patrons of this society event were dressed in lace costumes. Which goes to show the importance of lace in the present mode. For the ensemble pictured brown novelty net was used. The dress has a self-ruching down the front and sleeves. The jacket is short and sleeveless.

Fred—Can you tell me how to go through life without meeting with disappointments?

Jimmy—Yes; just go around looking for trouble all the time.—Pathfinder

Speed Did This

In the Windshield

Out the Rear Window

Excessive speed on the highway doesn't always manifest itself in the usual type of smashup—the mass of crumpled steel and splintered wood that one sees so often pictured in the newspapers. Sometimes speed chooses odd, almost unbelievable ways of striking back at those who defy the laws of safety.

The stone shown in the top photograph weighs more than seven pounds and was thrown by a passing car. To lift it up to windshield height the machine which threw it must have been moving at a high rate of speed. The car through which it passed must also have been moving rapidly, for the missile pierced the non-shatterable glass windshield, killed a passenger in the front seat and knocked an occupant of the rear seat unconscious, and then continued on its way through the non-shatterable rear window.

It takes more than ordinary force to puncture such glass, even with a seven-pound stone. It takes force akin to that generated by tornadoes, which have been known to drive straws deep into trees. It takes speed.

BRITAIN JEALOUS OF KING'S ENGLISH

Linguistic Guide Prepared by Noted Academicians.

London.—The Britannic broad-dialect at the studios of the musical Broadcasting company has been restored and "that shocking American accent" has been alienated.

The accent belonged to Robert Bowman, a Canadian who announced for the Olympic Ice hockey games in Garmisch.

He had all the gusto and scolding excitement of the American announcer, roared with "hoo we are, folks, huddled right down in front in the clear, brisk cold waiting for . . . oh boy, what a shot! What a shot! . . . I wish you could have seen it follow!"

It was shocking to the powers of the B. B. C. The next day a flood of letters came to Broadcasting house complaining about the American accent.

Must Be Pontifical.

So Bowman, an announcer for 18 months, was gently put off the air, and it was announced that hereafter all broadcasters will maintain the official B. B. C. manner of speaking.

—Pontifical and superior to the sway of any emotion.

But Bowman's departure failed to satisfy domestic quinquies as to correct pronunciation.

As long as a town with a name like Trouttschiff is pronounced like "Trossly" and the natives of Alderbury call their leader "Alderbury," the tongue-twisting announcers of the British Broadcasting corporation are going to have their troubles.

Every time some announcer calls Dulwich by its simple name of Dulwich, a lot of infuriated listeners write to ask why he talks like "some bloomin' foreigner" and why doesn't he call it "Dullidge" as it should be known.

But It Grows Worse.

It's even worse than that. When an announcer is talking about the section of Greater London he safely can call it Bromley, just as it is spelled. But if he's talking about Bromley in Kent it's "Bromly." It's the same way with Romford, Kent, and Romford, Essex. One is "Romford," the other "Rumford."

In an effort to standardize pronunciations of place names the B. B. C. after months of research, has issued a little book called "Broad East English." A special commission of linguists worked months in its preparation.

The place-name guide is based on the theory that every town should be known as it is to its residents, and it is admitted that there isn't a man to be found in the whole United Kingdom who could pronounce correctly half of the town names.

If there are any to contest the assertion, let them try out their tongue on Uplham, Garboldisham, Harden hush, Hantholth, Piddletrenthide, Puncthrowl, or Meols.

Chance Is Rated Chief Factor in Inventions

Oakland, Calif.—The invention of simple, inexpensive gadgets brings the greatest returns to the inventor, according to Albert G. Burns, president of the Inventors' association.

He declares that inventors are divided into two classes—professional and accidental. Whoever class the inventor comes under, however, Burns insists that simplicity and cheapness are the two great elements for financial success.

Eighty-five per cent of the patents applied for, he says, are of the accidental class.

Miss Dorothy Leneer of Ada, Okla., a registered nurse, took care of her sister's baby and invented a dissolvable diaper. She received $68,000 for her family, whose previous income in the oil fields had not exceeded $135 a month.

Household items yield the greatest returns, according to Burns. Toys come next. One of the latter sold $500,000 in one year for its inventor, Clark L. Fry of Needham, Wis., who has 108 patented gadgets to his credit.

Burns insists there is a fortune ahead for the man who invents a scheme for keeping straw hats from turning yellow.

Exploring Syrian Center for Ancient Roman Art

New Haven, Conn.—Three wooden shields, some 16 centuries old, used by the Roman soldiers stationed in Dura, "the Pompeii of the Euphrates," have been uncovered in that ancient city by the Yale expedition under the leadership of Dr. Clark Hopkins.

The shields, of fragile wood, bear paintings sufficiently well preserved to allow accurate reconstructions. They are executed with extraordinary spirit and great skill, and show classical subjects clad in manifestly eastern garb. Doctor Hopkins terms them "important links in the history of the development of ancient types of art."

Doctor Hopkins has announced that his team have been obtained to continue excavations for at least another year in Dura, which "still remains so rich in antiquities that one can scarcely touch the spine to the ground without revealing findings of utmost historical importance."

ELLSWORTH TELLS OF EPOCHAL FLIGHT

Explorer First to Fly Across Antarctic Continent.

Washington.—Three hundred and fifty thousand square miles of territory was claimed for the United States when Lincoln Ellsworth, first man to fly across the Antarctic continent between the eightieth and one hundredth and several meridians west longitude, and extending from the coast to the South pole.

In his report just made to the National Geographic society, Mr. Ellsworth said that the flag was planted with permission of the State department. The explorer named the area James W. Ellsworth Land for his father.

For his epoch-making flight and for other feats of Arctic and Antarctic exploration since 1925, Mr. Ellsworth was awarded the Hubbard medal of the National Geographic society.

Discovered Mountain Ranges. Besides the exploration and claiming of the vast area of Antarctica for the United States, Mr. Ellsworth reported that he found Stefansson's antipole, and may extend to the South polar continent.

During the period of nearly two months that Ellsworth and Herbert Hollick-Kenyon, his pilot, were out of touch with the rest of the world, they knew at no time "lost." They knew their exact position in terms of latitude and longitude at all times, but were unable to establish radio contact.

Throughout their flight, up to the time they abandoned their plane 16 miles from Little America, the two flyers kept to their predetermined schedule of broadcasting to the supply ship, the Wyatt Earp, twice during the "night" hours and once during the morning hours they attempted to send word of their whereabouts, but the signals were not received. The explorers had 24 hours of daylight.

The flight across Antarctica covered 2,940 miles, about the distance from Washington to Los Angeles, of which 1,740 were flown over the Antarctic continent.

The explorers took off November 22, 1935, from Dundas Island, which is 500 miles south of Cape Horn, the southernmost tip of South America. The Wyatt Earp, the expedition ship, meanwhile started the 2,000-mile voyage around to Little America to meet them.

After crossing Stefansson strait and striking out over the continent, they flew over a rugged, bold, mountain range bare of snow and rising 12,000 feet above sea level. This was named the Eternity range.

Plateau of Polar Ice. Beyond these mountains the plane soared over a plateau of polar snow and ice. This plateau continued unbroken practically all the way to the Ross Shelf Ice. In the afternoon the plane's radio failed. Another mountain range sighted was named the Sentinel range, and the central peak, 13,000 feet high, was christened Mr. Louis Louie Ulmer for Mr. Ellsworth.

The first landing was made to determine position on the level plateau about 6,400 feet above the sea. Here the flyers stayed 12 hours and raised the United States flag. On November 24, they took off again but came down after 30 minutes because of low visibility. After staying grounded three days, another attempt was made, but again bad weather forced them down after 50 minutes in the air. Then came a blizzard and 45-mile gale which grounded the men for eight days. The temperature dropped to five below zero Fahrenheit.

The next flight lasted four hours and was followed by a landing to determine position. The flyers then took off on the last leg of their flight, which was ended when the last of their 406 gallons of fuel ran out. From the final landing point the men groped their way through a fog to Little America. They reached Admiral Byrd's abandoned base December 15. They had been on the way 22 days, of which 20 days and 15 minutes were spent in the air.

Fuel and some food were found in the Byrd camp. The abandoned huts, 15 feet under the snow, afforded the explorers their first sleep in the dark since they left their ship, the Wyatt Earp. On January 15, Hollick-Kenyon heard an airplane overhead, and as he emerged from the hut a note on a small parachute dropped through the fog almost at his feet. The plane was from the Discovery II.

Mr. Ellsworth said his plans for the flight worked out well except for the failure of the radio and the shortage of gasoline.

Goos for Walk in Nightshirt Told.—With the mercury at 8 degrees above zero at 5:30 a. m., police found a man, clad in a nightshirt, in the street, six blocks from his home. He claimed he had just stepped out for a walk and became lost.

Here is an example of what too many pedestrians do. The person illustrated above never had time to wait for the green light, but now, as all will admit, he has PLENTY of time. No doubt any person who has had such an experience will decide it's better to wait a few seconds than to spend weeks and even months getting over injuries suffered because of impatience.

Last year there were more than a thousand pedestrians killed when they crossed at intersections against the signal, and there were more than 25,000 who were injured, according to the Travelers Insurance Company. Many of those killed, if they had a chance to do it over again, would be more than willing to wait for the light to turn in their favor. Very likely those injured feel the same way. It may be a little lisp to wait for the signal to flash "Go," but one remains dead a long time, and it's far from being funny to be kept in bed recovering from injuries.

No doubt any person who has had such an experience will decide it's better to wait a few seconds than to spend weeks and even months getting over injuries suffered because of impatience.

Last year there were more than a thousand pedestrians killed when they crossed at intersections against the signal, and there were more than 25,000 who were injured, according to the Travelers Insurance Company. Many of those killed, if they had a chance to do it over again, would be more than willing to wait for the light to turn in their favor. Very likely those injured feel the same way. It may be a little lisp to wait for the signal to flash "Go," but one remains dead a long time, and it's far from being funny to be kept in bed recovering from injuries.

Here is an example of what too many pedestrians do. The person illustrated above never had time to wait for the green light, but now, as all will admit, he has PLENTY of time. No doubt any person who has had such an experience will decide it's better to wait a few seconds than to spend weeks and even months getting over injuries suffered because of impatience.

URGE BASIC ENGLISH
PLAN TO AID STUDY

Briton's System Would Reduce Verbs to 18.

Boston.—The administration is not the only alphabet twister. The linguists are doing a bit of it, too. Dr. Frank C. Leubach, Portland, Ore., has suggested addition of 15 letters to the alphabet, claiming foreigners could learn to speak English in two weeks if it were done.

But a couple of Boston experts are wedded to another system, which they consider sure-fire.

Miss Mary L. Guiton, supervisor of adult alien education in the Massachusetts department of education, and Joseph F. Gould, director of evening schools, are of the opinion Doctor Leubach's system would not work nearly so well as Cambridge devised by the English expert, Prof. O. K. Ogden of Cambridge university. Professor Ogden's system is to decrease the number of letters and words.

Miss Guiton explained the Ogden system of "basic English" has simplified the language. A list of 850 basic words has been drawn and grouped for phonetic and spelling purposes in which, for example, 18 verbs take the place of 2500.

The system has been tried in a number of European countries, according to Miss Guiton, and it has been found that with intensive study of several hours a day for three weeks a student can learn to speak the English language perfectly.

Miss Guiton, with Miss Anne Kelley, supervisor of adult alien education of Peabody, studied eight weeks with Professor Ogden at the Orthological Institute at Cambridge university last summer, and following their return, the system was introduced here.

Figures of Speech Show
Each Civilization Era

Stanford University, Calif.—Figures of speech, developed during each era of civilization, are said to be of the utmost use to etymologists in determining the characteristics of the age that produced them, according to Prof. W. H. Davis, etymologist at Stanford university.

Generations from now, he explains, the fact that the crooner in his sweetest heart is his "vintages A. B. and C." or even "vintages A. B. and C." or even "vintages A. B. and C." will indicate to future etymologists that the present era was one of highly developed medical progress and of the art of eating.

Davis insists that figures of speech are not slang and do not have the same value in the language. The figures of speech, he points out, specifically name the thing that is being talked about, while slang is usually mere metaphor and hence valueless for future etymologists unless they find a modern Rosetta stone that tells them what it is all about.

Modern language is rich with figures of speech that indicate the characteristics of past ages, Davis says. He thinks that traces of the Cave age can be found in such figures as "cut-throat tactics" or "wielding the big stick."

Lost Koran Manuscript
Found in Shop in Cairo

Jerusalem.—The four-year-old mystery of the disappearance from the museum of the Mosque El Akssa of a Koran manuscript of the Middle Ages was solved when it was found in the shop of a Cairo antiquity dealer, to whom the document had been sold for $50.

The Koran was part of a collection of 23 manuscript volumes which were considered priceless because they had been written by the Moslem Sultan Abdul Hussein Merini in the Thirteenth century.

In the same style as the ancient Roman Koran found in the Mosque of Cordova, the manuscript was treasured because of its remarkable decorations. It was written 605 years ago on Gasselle parchment, luxuriously illustrated, bound in gold and embellished on both sides in silver.

College Scholarships
Valued at $10,000,000

St. Louis.—More than 50,000 scholarships and fellowships, representing a value of $10,000,000, are available each year at colleges and universities in the country. Dr. George F. Donovan, president of Webster college, has found.

Since the war, he said, with the desire for higher education greatly increased, this money has been made possible through the scholarships. Public and private institutions, alumni, societies, clubs, industrial organizations, churches and individuals have given considerable sums of money to provide deserving students with higher education.

Known by Their Noises
Horses' nose-prints are all different, just as are our own fingerprints. And they can be used for identification in the same way, says Answers Magazine. This is done on French race-courses, to prevent horses of superior quality being disguised and run under assumed names in races which they can't help winning at long odds.

PERFORMER NOT A POLITICIAN

Senator M. Mills Logan has served Kentucky in the United States Senate since 1931—a period which demanded talent, understanding and vision. During that time Senator Logan became known in Washington as a good Senator, one whose views and judgment were respected by his colleagues.

The record shows him to have had greater devotion to his duty as Senator than to personal politics, or politicians. Though he has been loyal to the interests of the New Deal, he has not been a blind slave of the national administration. He has frequently demonstrated that he has a mind of his own, and the courage to use it.

During the six years that he has served in the Senate, Senator Logan has made no effort to establish himself as a political boss. He has not interfered in any of the State or local elections which have taken place in Kentucky since he has been in a position to wield influence; had he been so minded. Neither by act nor gesture has he ever tried to dictate to the people of Kentucky from Washington.

Level-headedness has been shown to be one of his chief virtues. Born at Brownsville, he saw early experience as county attorney and subsequently as assistant attorney general, attorney general, chairman of the State Tax Commission, member and Chief Justice of the State Court of Appeals. In the fraternal field, he rose to the position of Grand Sir of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Perhaps it is because of his greater loyalty to duty than to factional politics that Senator Logan has been what he has, and is where he is.—Louisville Herald-Post.

MORE PROTESTS ON HOLD-UPS BY CONSTABLES

In Kenton County By Out-of-State

Automobile Drivers. Indiana

Man In Vehement Protest

C. J. Turpin of the Krogman Distilling Company, Tell City, Ind., wrote the following letter to Governor Chandler, relating his experience in Kenton county, with constable and magistrate. The letter, taken from the Hoosier State in its letter said:

"For the first time in my life I was traveling State Highway 42 out of Covington, Ky., and had come as far south as South Ft. Mitchell and had passed the city limits of such town, and as there were school children walking in the first lane of traffic, and not wanting to come too close to them, I was taking the second lane, and driving slowly. The first thing I knew an officer by the name of Hoffman arrested me and took me back to Covington before a justice of peace. This justice of peace found me guilty of a breach of the peace and asked me to pay a fine of $17. However, when I informed him that I did not have that much cash upon my person, he did me a so-called 'personal favor' by reducing the fine to $8."

"I have never been arrested before in my life for even a minor traffic violation, and I do not care to have this blot standing against my name. If it had been a legitimate arrest, and the fine had been paid to some city, county or state I would not mind it so much, but to enrich the pockets of a self-centered constable and his justice of peace employer, I think it a disgrace to any community and the vilest legal racket ever perpetrated. To me it is the same as collecting money under false pretenses, since money under false pretenses is what individuals who were arrested by this constable, and if I thought for one minute that my bringing suit for false arrest and collecting money under false pretenses would aid in keeping any other fellow traveler from becoming so embarrassed, you may rest assured that I would do so—but after talking to some of the citizens in Covington I was told that this would be just plain folly."

"I do not mind the loss of the $8 but I do mind enriching the pockets of an individual who has no more right to that money than the moocher on the street who comes up and asks for a dime."

"I might add that on the return trip to Covington there were a great many automobiles passing us going fifty, sixty, and seventy-five miles an hour, but they carried license plates bearing the name of Kenton county, and therefore, were not molested. While I was in the office of this justice of peace, there were six other individuals brought in and every one was from another State besides Kentucky. I went over to the County Courthouse after leaving the justice of peace, and I was informed that even if I would start out again on Highway 42 that I would be stopped by another constable before getting out of the county, and be arrested for any misdemeanor and that the safest thing for me to do was to cross and go to Louisville by way of Ohio and Indiana."

"I certainly think that this should be brought to your personal attention, and if there is anything at all to be done to make these men recover from their insanity, you, as a governor, should do so."

ALL VOTERS MUST REGISTER

At Town and Country Places In Kentucky Under New Election Law

Under the new election law, for the first time in the history of Kentucky, all voters must register for primary election day, August 1st in every county voting place, town and city in compliance with the new election law.

Clerks who will be recommended by the executive committee of the major political parties will be deputized to register voters at the regular polling places throughout the county.

Rural voters of the state of Kentucky will be registered for the first time in history of the Commonwealth. Urban voters are required to register under the new system.

One of the most revolutionary provisions of the new registration law requires registered voters who have failed to vote for two consecutive years to appear at the office of the county clerk and show reason why their names should not be stricken from the record book.

The purpose of the new registration law is to insure honest elections and to make a complete and up-to-the-minute list of the eligible voters in each precinct, in authors declare.

Complete details of the clerical system to be employed have not been announced by the state officials.

He is to be commended for his zeal and untiring efforts.

KENTON COUNTY GRAND JURY DOES ITS DUTY

Lookout House Owner Receives 12 Indictments. 38 Indictments in All Returned

A real "honest to goodness" grand jury finished their duties in its investigation of the unlawful affairs of Kenton county in Covington, Saturday. It must have been composed of real men who did their duty as they saw it, and the result was 38 indictments of the "high-rollers." Anyone with the least observation could see that there was something rotten in official circles in Kenton county. Gambling was rampant and anyone with but one eye could see it. Not satisfied with the "rake-off" some of the owners of these gambling establishments made it impossible for the juries to make "big money." This, in a measure, caused their downfall. A grand jury was selected from "real men" who were honestly in favor of good city and county government and could not be handled by any clique. A majority of this grand jury were in favor of and attempted to have certain officials indicted for malfeasance of office, but a few of the jurymen demurred.

Fifteen of the thirty-eight indictments returned Saturday by the Kenton County grand jury grew out of the body's investigation of alleged gambling at the Lookout House.

Four indictments, charging conspiring to violate the gaming laws, named James H. Brink, manager of the Lookout House; Louis Levinson, John Rigney and Edward Curd.

Judge John Northcutt fixed bonds of $3,000 each.

Jas. H. Brink was named in four other indictments, charging him with suffering a game of chance on the Lookout House premises.

Brink, Levinson, Rigney and Curd also were named in four other indictments charging them with setting up gambling devices.

Ben Castleman, Pike street cafe owner and former employee of the Kentucky State Tax Commission, was charged with false swearing.

Two other indictments charging false swearing were returned against Ole Pieper, Madison avenue liquor dealer, and Claude Heston.

Bonds in all of these cases were fixed at $1,000.

The grand jurors made the following statement in their report to Judge Northcutt:

"There is now in progress a life-and-death struggle between the large law-abiding majority of citizens of this county and a smaller but powerful highly-organized, group of lawless persons, only a part of whom are natives. The issue will determine whether Kenton county shall become a decent community, or go further along the road to gambler and racketeer control of all public officials, with the inevitable and complete disregard for law and order. See what happens to the persons we have indicted. Note how many others are indicted later and what happens to them. The fight is on. Take a hand. Do your part."

"We recommend that another grand jury be impeached to look further into the present situation. This jury regrets that for the lack of time it can not legally continue its fight against gambling."

"Be sure that official corruption is 99 per cent responsible for non-enforcement of the law. Our public officials have ample power to stop gambling. The present condition is inexcusable."

"Records over the past 12 years show 363 indictments against gamblers. Only two indicted persons have been tried. The other cases were disposed of by fines imposed on the recommendation of the Commonwealth attorney."

"From evidence submitted to this jury we have a prosperous Monte Carlo in this community, the jury believes."

"This jury has heard overwhelming evidence that large sums of money have been and are continuing to be collected by gamblers in Covington, Ludlow and in Kenton County, particularly at the Lookout House and the Schlosser place. It is

Angora Fiber Finest Textile

Microscopic examination proves Angora fiber to be the finest textile there is, much finer even than silk. Very little care is needed to keep the hair from matting. For commercial weaving, the coarse fiber is the most desirable, and the best wool of this type is obtained from the castrated males.

Origin of Word "Quit"

The word "quit" is of uncertain origin. It is said that Dally, manager of a Dublin play house, laid a wager that a new word of no meaning should be the common talk and puzzle of the city in 24 hours. In consequence the letters "q" and "u" were chalked by him on the walls of Dublin with an effect that won the wager. The word, however, appears in literature some years before the date of this episode.

"Queen Mary" New Queen of the Seas

Photographers and news reporters utilize airplanes and wireless transmission to "cover" epoch making voyage

NEW YORK CITY—The "Queen Mary" was safely tied up in her berth here after one of the most momentous voyages in maritime history.

Photographers and news reporters covered the arrival of the huge ship from airplanes and by wireless. Huge crowds jammed the docks along the north river as the great vessel maneuvered up the harbor and was pulled into her new million dollar pier.

American industrial development played a part in the epoch-making trip of the ship as her main propelling machinery was fabricated by the marine oils developed by Secor-Vacuum—the same company which makes the Mobil oil that is used by American motorists. Among the distinguished British business leaders aboard the "Queen Mary" was Alexander Lowe McCall, Chairman of the board of directors of the Vacuum Oil Company Ltd., London.

Upper right shows an airplane of the British Royal Flying Corps as it dipped low over the ship in a final salute prior to her sailing.

The middle pier, shown in the lower picture, is Pier 90 on the North River, New York, where the ship docked at the end of her voyage. This pier was specially constructed for the "Queen Mary" at a cost of over $1,000,000.

When Shaking Hands

It used to be the custom that persons were required to remove their right glove before shaking hands. Men still are expected to do this before shaking hands with women acquaintances, particularly so if the woman's hand is ungloved. However, failure to remove the glove is no serious offense and will not be the object of criticism. In fact, it would be better not to attempt to remove it if it is apt to cause embarrassment and an awkward pause, which is bound to occur when a gloving fitting glove requires frantic fumbling in order to remove it quickly and gracefully to meet the proffered hand.

Tobacco Hogheads

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics says that there is no absolute standard for the size of tobacco hogheads used in the United States. However, the usual commercial size has a diameter of 48 inches and a height of 54 inches. Tobacco packed for export is generally placed in hogheads 48 by 48 inches.

Making Olive Oil

In making olive oil the olives are first crushed in a machine, consisting of a circular stone trough in which revolves a stone wheel. The crushed fruit next goes into a press, being first placed in flat, woven bags of reeds. This process gives the finest, so-called virgin oil, of course. Subsequent pressings yield pure but somewhat inferior oil, and finally water is added to the crushed mass, and oil suitable for various manufacturing purposes is obtained. The refuse is dried and used for fuel.

Spider's Thread Strong

An ordinary spider's thread will support the weight of three grains, while it is calculated that a steel thread of the same size would support rather less than two grains. A hair of steel one inch in diameter would support about fifty tons. A spider's web of that thickness, could it exist, would be capable of supporting seventy-four tons. The strength of a spider's web is thus one and a half times that of steel, and nearly three times that of wrought-iron.

Boone County Farm Notes

H. R. FORKNER, County Agent

Attends Junior Week

Harold Ogden of the Burlington "Blue Ribbon" 4-H club, Ella Ruth Black of the Hamilton "Silver Leader" 4-H club, Anna Mary Grant and Louise Elkins of the Hebron "Northeast Champion" 4-H club, Mrs. Claude Black of Hamilton, Miss Gillaspie, Home Demonstration Agent and H. R. Forkner, County Agent, attended Junior Week at the University of Kentucky in Lexington last week.

Harold Ogden is Boone County's 1935 4-H club tobacco champion and will receive a free trip to Chicago in December. Ella Ruth Black is representing Boone county 4-H clubs in the State Style Dress Revue. Louise Elkins and Anna Mary Grant are representing Boone county 4-H clubs in Canning Demonstration Team Contest.

Explains Lack of Adjustment Payment For Burley Tobacco

Last year's burley tobacco crop sold more than 2 cents a pound above its fair exchange or parity value, which is the reason the AAA made no adjustment payment on the 1935 crop this spring, according to W. G. Finn, Assistant Director of the Agricultural Conservation program for the East-Central Region.

"The determination of adjustment payments is not an arbitrary decision," says Mr. Finn, "but has been made in accordance with provisions of the burley contract and the notice of the continuation of the contract for 1935. The contract provides that the rates of the adjustment payments shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and shall be such as will tend to give producers a fair exchange value for that portion of their 1935 production which is equal to domestic consumption.

Figures to date indicate that the prices paid by farmers for commodities bought by them during the current year 1935-36 are only 76.87 per cent as high as they were on the average during the base period specified in the Act, 1919-1928. In other words, to buy the same amount of goods with the proceeds of the sale of 100 pounds of burley tobacco of the 1935 crop, tobacco prices would have to be 76.87 per cent as high as in the base period.

The average price of burley tobacco during the 10-year base period was 23.2 cents a pound, and 76.87 per cent of 23.2 cents equals 17.1 cents. Therefore, the fair exchange value as defined in the Act for the 1935 crop of burley tobacco is 17.1 cents a pound. The average net sale price of the 1935 crop as computed from the official record of sales is 19.2 cents a pound, which is 2.1 cents a pound higher than the fair exchange value.

Careful consideration has been given to the possibility of making an adjustment payment in regard to burley tobacco in 1935, but we have been informed that, according to the terms of the contract, and the provisions of the supplemental appropriation act, fiscal year 1936 it is legally impossible to make any such payment."

1626 Work Sheets Filled Out Under Agricultural Conservation Program

One thousand and twenty work sheets covering more than 90% of the farm land in Boone county has been filled out under the Agricultural Conservation program.

The primary purpose of the program is to conserve and improve the Nation's soil fertility and halt the wasteful exploitation of soil resources. Farmers may earn payments for increasing the acreage of crops that conserve the soil and by adopting practices that increase soil fertility.

The work sheet which is filled out contains spaces for recording the acreage of crops harvested in 1935 and other information about the farm. It should be filled out with the help of a committee member or other qualified person. Filling out and signing the work sheet does not place the signer under any obligation or bind him in any way, but it is necessary that the work sheet be filed at the County Office before he can apply for payment.

Boone county has been divided into six communities in the new Association set-up as follows: 1. Burlington and Florence; 2. Petersburg and Grant; 3. Hebron and Constance; 4. Hamilton and Carleton; 5. Union and Beaver; 6. Walton and Verona. Beginning this week a meeting will be held in each of the six communities to elect permanent committees. Each of the six communities will elect three regular committee members and one alternate from among the members of the Association living in the community who will serve for the remainder of the year 1936.

All persons who have not filled out a work sheet for their farm are urged to do so immediately.

The Ocotillo

The ocotillo is a thorny shrub of the tamarisk family, sometimes called candlewood. It branches at the base into several intensely spiny stems, 10 to 25 feet high. There are leafy only near the top, and bear at their upper end narrow clusters of bright scarlet flowers. The ocotillo is a characteristic shrub of rock mesas and deserts from western Texas to California. From its thorny appearance it is often mistaken for cactus. Mexicans weave ocotillo stems into fences.

Washington—Ellis S. Joseph, 200-pound dealer in strange and rare animals, is famed as the only man who ever brought a duckbill platypus into captivity.

Aside from this, Joseph once presented an Australian city with the largest chimpanzee in captivity, knows every corner of the earth by heart, and virtually can name every animal that inhabits them.

He has walked from one coast of Africa to the other collecting animals and reptiles.

Born in Bombay and educated in China, Joseph is an Australian citizen.

"Recurrent Spectacles" for Invalids Are Shown

London—"Recurrent spectacles"—glasses for invalids and others who have to lie more or less flat on their backs and who wish to read—are shown to the public at the British Industrial fair.

These spectacles enable the wearer to see more or less at right angles to the ordinary line of sight so that a book can be read held comfortably at arms' length, resting on the waist—in a position where it could not be read at all, ordinarily, without raising the head from the pillow.

Direct, Alternating Current

The difference between alternating and direct current is visually explained in their names. In a direct current system the current flows continuously in the same direction, and the pressure, or voltage, is constantly in the same direction. This is useful where demand is concentrated. In an alternating current circuit, the current, and thus the pressure, reverses periodically. It can be raised in voltage by stationary apparatus—transformers—for transmission to a distant point and can be lowered in voltage for use. It is more flexible in application.

C. C. C. BOYS NOT GUILTY

Of Robbery of James E. Clark,
Grant County Jury Holds.

In Jail 70 Days

In the Grant County Court at Williamstown, Ky., last week, Chas. Case, 23, and George Morris, 25, were found not guilty by a jury and ordered discharged. Both boys are members of the C. C. C. camp here. They had served 70 days in the Williamstown jail.

At the time of their arrest, Clark alleged that the boys had thumbed a ride near Crittenden, Ky., April 1 and he alleges they took his car and drove to Newport, Ky., and then returned to Walton, where he alleged they robbed him of about $50.

It developed at the trial that Clark had probably lost his money in a slot machine. The jury rendered a speedy verdict, "not guilty" after hearing the evidence and they were immediately discharged from custody.

James E. Clark resides in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Stephenson Mill Repaired

The Boone County Fiscal Court recently made an appropriation to repair the Stephenson Mill road, west of Walton, which was a very commendable action on its part. The road is now in much better condition for travel, much to the gratification of those living on this highway.

Mrs. C. T. Varnon and sisters Misses Martha and Eugenia Layson who reside on a farm east of Walton, which they recently sold, contemplate moving to Millersburg, Boone county, Ky., in the near future. Mrs. Varnon recently returned from St. Elizabeth Hospital, Covington, where she spent two weeks for treatment for dropsy, and has greatly improved since. She is loud in praise of the good Sisters of that institution for their untiring efforts to show kindness to the afflicted and suffering patients. This institution deserves great praise for its charitable work which is one of the heavy expenses of the hospital. However, the Sisters are uniformly kind to all, irrespective of their financial worth.

WHEN VOTERS SHOULD REGISTER

All Rural and Small Town Voters Should Register August 1st

The registration law passed at the last session of the Legislature makes it necessary that every person who desires to vote at the Primary Election to be held in August and the regular November Election to register. The first registration will be held at the regular voting precincts on the date of the August Primary, August 1, 1936. If a voter should fail to register on that day he may register in the office of the Clerk of the County Court between the 15th day of August and the 10th day of October. If one fails to register as required, he can not vote, as the registration is necessary to exercise the right to vote. Registration may also be made between the 15th day of November and the 10th day of July in any year with the County Clerk. It is not necessary to register but one time nor change your registration unless you change your residence or desire to change your party affiliation. If you change your residence, then it is necessary to have your registration changed. As a failure to do so, you will not be permitted to vote. This is a law that just goes into effect in the rural communities, but has been in force in cities and towns for a long time. The election officers in each precinct will have a list of all persons entitled to vote in the respective districts and unless your name is on that list you can not vote for the candidates of your choice. It is very important that all voters register as the law requires. As a failure to do so will prevent one from exercising his right of suffrage.

Mrs. Ruth McCubbin Funeral

Owing to the fact that we were misinformed relative to some details of the death and funeral of Mrs. Ruth McCubbin, we will make the following corrections: Her age was 67 instead of 58, one son's name was omitted, Howard McCubbin; Rev. D. E. Bedinger read scriptural passages at the church, Rev. Roy Johnson delivered the funeral sermon and Rev. T. L. Woolen offered prayer. The remains were laid to rest in the Walton cemetery instead of Verona. Mrs. J. B. Johnson and Mrs. Kenneth Johnson sang two beautiful sacred songs, "Asleep in Jesus," and "Sometime We'll Understand."

Rhea, former State Highway Commissioner, was filed in Federal District court, last Wednesday. The suit, brought by Herman M. Kessler, Trustee in Bankruptcy, charged the incorporators are personally liable on the ground they permitted the corporation to begin business and incur debts before 50 per cent if the stock had been subscribed, as provided in its charter. The paper started last October and suspended publication after a short time. The trustee said assets are insufficient to meet liens and nothing exists for unsecured creditors. Huddleston, with a claim of $40,577, is one of the chief creditors. Many other defendants throughout the state are named.

SEN. M. M. LOGAN

Endorsed By the Druggists of Kentucky in Session at Louisville

Louisville, Ky., June 24.—Druggists of Kentucky commended and endorsed Senator M. M. Logan, candidate for re-nomination and re-election individually and collectively at the fifty-ninth annual convention of the Kentucky Pharmaceutical Association here last Wednesday.

Commendation and thanks were voted to Senator Logan by the convention as a whole, while individual endorsement was voted by scores of members, including Herman Schuler, Covington, President of the Association; Charles Ehlers, Cincinnati, Ohio, President of the National Association of Retail Druggists, and C. A. Chandler, Cincinnati, special representative of the National Association.

Support of Senator Logan by the druggists was based upon his long record in behalf of national legislation proposed by the druggists of the United States. They were loud in their praise of the manner in which he had labored to obtain passage of the Robinson-Patman Anti-Price Discrimination Law. They gave him full credit for the passage of the law, which was signed by President Roosevelt, recently.

"We know Senator Logan is our friend," Schuler said. "He worked for us and stood by us. Now it is up to us to work for him and stand by him."

"The druggists of Kentucky and of the United States owe Senator Logan a debt of gratitude," Chandler declared. "If they don't support him they don't deserve to be helped."

Ehlers asked for support of Senator Logan in his following statement: "For the sincere efforts and work done by Senator Logan in Washington for the druggists, as President of the National Association of Retail Druggists, I ask the druggists of this state to do their duty to Senator Logan in the coming election."

The resolution of the Kentucky Pharmaceutical Association commending Senator Logan was adopted amid applause at a general session of the convention without dissent. It was presented to the convention by Schuler. The resolution follows:

"Be it resolved by the Kentucky Pharmaceutical Association, assembled in its fifty-ninth annual convention at Louisville, Ky., June 24, 1936, that Senator Logan of Kentucky be commended for his active support of legislation proposed by druggists of the United States, and particularly for his work in fighting for and guiding the Robinson-Patman Anti-Price Discrimination Law through the Congress of the United States. Be it further resolved that we do express our sincere thanks to him for his successful efforts on our behalf, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to Senator Logan and released to the press of our state and our industry."

Severe Drought Of Several Months

Broken Tuesday Afternoon When a Copious Rain Relieved the Condition

The drought of several months was broken Tuesday afternoon when a copious rain visited this section and continued into the night. Monday night was the hottest in the history of June since 1874. The rain was very beneficial for those who have not set out their tobacco, and was of great value to crops already out. Grass on lawns and pastures were revived, and generally it was a Godsend to this section. However, it is stated that the rain occurred only in spots throughout the state. Wednesday a drizzling rain continued. Weather conditions up to Monday were very alarming for the farmers.

Avoid Wrong Way of Killing Hogs

Careless Methods, Trusting to Luck, May Cause Loss, Expert Advises.

By R. E. Nance, Professor of Animal Husbandry, North Carolina State College—WAS Service.

The farmer who uses haphazard methods and trusts to luck at hog-killing time runs a big risk of losing his meat.

The right way to kill hogs is just as easy as the wrong way, and with proper curing it virtually assures successful preservation of the meat.

Many of the methods employed in "dads" time" were responsible for the heavy losses usually experienced. Some of the worst faults are:

Hogs were usually killed on the coldest days of mid-winter, under the impression that the extreme cold would preserve the meat. Bitter cold weather made the task difficult and it was rushed through in too big a hurry.

A temperature of 28 to 40 degrees is preferable. The carcasses should be allowed to hang overnight in the smokehouse so as to let all the animal heat dissipate before curing is started.

The custom of shooting hogs or knocking them in the head was prevalent. Then the hogs were dragged to a lot of water to wash either too hot or too cold.

The bodies were bruised, the carcasses did not bleed properly, and the hair did not scrape off as it should. Such hogs, when allowed to bleed thoroughly, and scald them in water heated to 150 degrees, no more, no less.

Do not feed the hogs within 24 hours of killing time. Doing so wastes feed and makes the carcasses harder to dress. Do not eat the carcasses until the next day.

Veterinarian Explains How to Prevent Hog Flu

Though influenza in hogs does not cause death directly, the disease opens the way for dangerous complicating diseases, especially pneumonia. To help avoid troubles, hog producers should pay careful attention to fall and winter care of the shelter and feeding of pigs, says Dr. H. C. H. Kernkamp of the veterinary division, University farm, St. Paul.

The sleeping quarters should be spacious enough and warm enough so that pigs will not huddle together or pile upon one another. They should be kept dry and free from drafts. A diet that is laxative and easily digested should be provided. Alfalfa meal, linseed meal or cottonseed meal, when incorporated with the ration, helps much to accomplish this end. Fresh, clean water should be available at all times.

Swine influenza, usually develops very suddenly. As a rule the entire herd sickens within a day or two. The temperatures of pigs sick with swine flu are usually raised. First lose their desire for food and may eat only small amounts or refuse food entirely. Affected pigs dislike to move, but prefer to lie around. Timid or jerky breathing is characteristic, and a violent spell of coughing is not uncommon.

A practicing veterinarian should be called at once when this disease is suspected. His counsel, first in recognizing the disease, and second in directing the care and management of affected animals, will help to prevent the losses from both swine flu and complicating diseases.

Try "Danish Red" Cattle

A new breed of dairy cattle, developed within the last 50 years, is to be used in breeding experiments by the Waseca branch of the Minnesota experiment station, in co-operation with the United States Department of Agriculture. The cattle came originally from Denmark, but the 22 heifers and two bulls to be used in the Waseca experiments were imported from the Virgin Islands, West Indies. They are known as "Red Danish."

They are known as "Red Danish," and rose from a foundation of native Scandinavian red cattle, improved with selections from the leading breeds of continental Europe. The heifers in the shipment to be sent to Waseca are each two years old, and the bulls are yearlings. Mature Danish Red cattle are of medium height, weigh from 1,100 to 1,200 pounds, and range in color from light red to a deep cherry-red. The dams of the heifers in the shipment averaged 525 pounds of live weight a year, and the dams of the sires averaged 622 pounds. The dam of one of the two bulls averaged 708 pounds, and the dam of other bull 637.

Cow Cycles

Texas farmers and livestock men sold more cattle to the government during the drought than appeared on the tax rolls. Only distressed cattle were supposed to be sold. Now the Lone Star cattlemen have the largest feed crop in history and not enough livestock to consume it, four or five years being required to stock up a cattle range by natural increase. And it may take longer than that to get the cattle, weather and other cycles working together.—The Country Home.

Bell Metal

Almost any metal or alloy can be made into a tube or bell or some other sound-producing device and can be so constructed as to give a note of a certain pitch. The quality of the note will depend upon the metal or alloy used. Thus, some are sharp and metallic, others mellow. This may be noticed in the case of church bells.

"Last Aid" Clubs

There are clubs for poor persons in Sofia, whose principal purpose is to provide their members with a good "send off" into the next world and to assure that their funerals

shall be "successes." The clubs have different names, the most popular being "Last Aid" and "Last Duty." When member dies, all

an agreed amount each to cover the funeral expenses and the meal which is offered to 12 mourners

after the ceremony. They also see to the provision of a proper hearse and flowers. All the members are obliged to walk in the funeral procession. In addition, if it found necessary, the remaining members provide relief for the widow and children of the deceased.

Solar Systems

Our solar system lies near the think that this central position is significant—that our sun and its planets occupy a position of greater physical stability than is possessed by other suns and their planets.

Let the Modern Phaethons Beware

Down thru the ages with the SPEED DEMON

The speed demon has always existed in one form or another. Greek mythology in the story of how Phaethon drove his father's chariot offers perhaps the earliest example of what can happen when people drive a vehicle so fast that it gets beyond their ability to control it. It will be remembered that Phaethon wished to prove that Apollo, the God of the Sun, was his father, and for his proof, sought to persuade his father to let him drive the chariot. Apollo finally consented with reluctance, and after many warnings and instructions, the boy set out. Then Phaethon lost control of the fiery horses and set the world on fire. Jupiter had to toss a thunderbolt at Phaethon to stop him.

This myth is strangely modern. People are warned today about the dangers of speed. But many drivers try to set the world on fire by their speed, just as Phaethon did.

When the horse and buggy cluttered up the streets, the speed demon was in evidence. Usually the horse was up for any delinquency in the judgment of the driver. Then, when the bicycle came, it was the driver who was held responsible. Now, with the automobile, the danger is even greater. The speed demon is a real danger today.

Last year the rate of death per accident which involved exceeding the speed limit was 25 per cent worse than the average death rate for all accidents due to improper driving practices. A word to the wise is sufficient. It has been said that if everybody would drive about 20 per cent slower a lot of the nation's oversupply of automobile accidents would be reduced.

Makes Scientific Study of Milk Produced by Sow

Adding to the meager information available concerning the production and composition of sow's milk, E. H. Hughes, associate professor of animal husbandry in the University of California, has published an article in the Journal of Nutrition on this subject. In this study, Professor Hughes has gathered at the branch of the college of agriculture all the known literature on the subject and has added to it the results of investigations made at Davis.

The average daily milk production of a sow is 8.5 pounds, just twice the amount produced when the first test was made in Germany 70 years ago.

Professor Hughes was particularly interested in the composition of the ash of colostrum and normal milk; he is the first study made in this field. He found the ash content relatively low at parturition, increasing during lactation. The calcium and phosphorus content of normal sow's milk is higher than that reported for the human or the cow.

Death Masks Discovered in Mounds in Wisconsin
Madison, Wis.—Known history in this state now goes back 15,000 years and a new record of ancient residents here is announced by Prof. Ralph Linton, University of Wisconsin anthropologist, in the discovery of what are said to be the first portrait death masks ever found in America. The masks were found in recently opened burial mounds in northwestern Wisconsin.

The masks are said to be 3,000 to 4,000 years old. Professor Linton believes they are a record of aborigines who came to this region from the South; people touched with the civilization developing in Mexico. They were farmers and traders, and knew the use of metal, probably coming here for copper.

Professor Linton says in his report: "Our work has thrown much light upon the life of this ancient people, and especially upon their treatment of their dead. These were not buried at once, but were kept for years as honored members of the community."

Agricultural Notes

Every farm needs a subsistence garden.

Incomplete feeding and lack of minerals cause rickets in pigs.

When cured, popcorn should contain about 12 per cent of moisture.

Colts may, at an early age, be accustomed to separation from their mothers during the day.

Big buffalo gnats invaded Tennessee fields in such swarms that farmers, taken unawares, were forced to abandon their plows and flee.

Can Make Own Photograph
When placed in direct contact with a photographic plate, a butterfly is not only able to produce a faithful picture of itself by a light-like emission of light, but also a similar photograph by sulphur gas arising from slow decomposition of its pigment—as long as 10 years after its death.—Collier's Weekly.

Stink Damp in Coal Mines
Stink damp, called also in coal mines which contains sufficient hydrogen sulphide to smell like rotten eggs. It is more poisonous than carbon monoxide, one-tenth of 1 per cent causing death.

California Gold First

Found on Sutter Ranch

It was on the land of John Sutter, a Swiss emigrant to California, that gold was discovered. Sutter had gone there in 1839, and by the time California became United States territory following the Mexican war he was the owner of an immense tract which he called New Helvetia and which, from his "fort" located at the junction of the Sacramento and American rivers on the site of what afterward became Sacramento city, he ruled practically independent of the Mexican authorities. Sutter's fort was a sort of station for the few immigrant trains that had made their way overland to California and about it he had gathered a number of workmen who filled his fields and cut timber in the hills to the east.

It was in digging a tailrace for a water-power sawmill on the south fork of the American river in January, 1848, that John Marshall, who had been in the work, discovered the dull yellow particles that in a few months were to make Sutter's land the mecca of fortune seekers the world over. Marshall tried to keep the discovery quiet, writes R. A. Barry in the New York Herald Tribune, but his workmen, a party of Mormons from the disbanded Mormon battalion that had been a part of the army General Kearny marched overland from Santa Fe, spread the news in San Francisco—and the gold rush was on.

Gold was found not only at "Mormon Island," which had been formed by the construction of the millrace but along both forks of the American river as well as along the streams that paralleled the American to the north and south. That Sutter was the owner of much of the gold-bearing land did not seem to matter. Claims were staked by all comers, and Sutter was left to petition congress for some sort of redress—which was never granted.

Gingerbread Love Test

Is Popular Over Holland

One of the favorite ditties of the Hollanders is gingerbread. It is popular all over the country, and unluckily is the young man who goes courting without a supply of it. Says a writer in the Boston Globe: "At the door his sweetheart meets him with the greeting, 'Have you any gingerbread, and if he has none, the atmosphere sometimes becomes decidedly chilly. If, on the other hand, he comes wisely prepared, he is assured of a pleasant evening the minute the gingerbread sack comes in sight."

At last the young man decides to "pop the question." That night he appears with a large cake under his arm, but gives no hint of the reason for his visit. The rest of the family, however, slips off to bed early, leaving him alone with the girl.

This is the fateful time. If she throws more meat on the fire, the young man understands that she loves him; they cut the cake and settle their future happily. Perhaps, though, she lets the fire die down; then her suitor realizes that she does not care for him and, bundling up the cake, he departs silently never to return.

Artificial Diamonds

Artificial diamonds were made many years ago by a French chemist, Henri Moissan. He got his idea when they diamonds were found in fragments of iron meteorites, according to a writer in The Bits Magazine. Knowing diamonds were crystallized carbon he attempted to reproduce the conditions which had once existed in the meteorites. Dissolving carbon in molten iron and then suddenly cooled the mass. This caused the outside to harden first, forming an outer shell which contracted and exerted a tremendous pressure on the inner substance. When the entire mass had cooled and hardened Moissan dissolved the iron away with hydrochloric acid and found that tiny diamonds had been formed from the carbon.

India's Largest Cave Temple

The largest cave temple in India is at Karli, a village in the Poona district. It contains a great hall 120 feet long 45 feet wide and 46 feet high, and its carving dates from the First century B. C.

Spoonful of Calories

White sugar is pure carbohydrate, and its energy value is about 50 calories to a scant tablespoonful. Butter, margarine, lard and the vegetable fats or oils yield about the same number of calories each—100 per scant tablespoonful.

Increase in Population

From 1880 to 1920 this country's population increased about 110 per cent, and the population of institutions for the mentally ill, 468 per cent.

Soil Service

Conservation

Important Information for Farmers in Conserving Grasses and Soils. A Department Connected With C.C.C. Camps

The prominent place given grass in erosion control work is explained by numerous experiments showing that an average of good grass cover reduces loss of water 20 percent or more, as compared to cultivated land, and practically prevents loss of soil, according to the Soil Conservation Service.

Pasture vegetation holds the soil, decreases the velocity and the movement of eroding moisture on slopes and increases the soil organic content.

Organic matter makes a more fertile topsoil and adds to its adsorption and moisture-holding capacity, which in turn decreases erosion. Aside from these qualities of good pasture, it is the "cheapest known feed available for livestock. Fortunately, the most productive pastures are also the best soil builders and moisture and soil savers. Those wishing to procure good pasture have access to plenty of sound information available on pastures from a productive standpoint. Because of these qualities of good pasture, much of the farm land on slopes too steep to be cultivated should be kept in pasture or meadow. Some slopes, too steep or too severely eroded, will need to be returned to woods.

Line is the first requirement of good pasture. The chief pasture plants are Kentucky Bluegrass and certain clover and legumes, all of which require considerable more lime than is available in the average pasture land of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee. Kentucky Bluegrass, as well as most other pasture grasses, makes much better growth, practically in drought years, when ample lime is present. Phosphorus is probably the second most important fertilizing element in pastures, and lime makes it more soluble and readily available to the plants. Another plant nutrient that pastures require in comparatively large quantities is nitrogen. This element can be provided by seeding legumes in the pasture and by providing a large amount of organic material in the soil. Most rundown pastures are deficient in organic matter which has a direct bearing upon the availability of nitrogen. Since clover and legumes have the power of building up the nitrogen supply in the soil these plants will, in a season or two make nitrogen available. These nitrogen producing plants are also excellent for pasture.

Another important plant nutrient on pasture land is potash. It is usually available in adequate quantities in clay and silt loam soils, but ordinarily will be found deficient for best pasture growth in sandy and gravelly soils.

General management of pastures is improvement. If good cover is to be maintained for pasture and protection of the soil, important factors to consider are moisture, soil fertility, and the pasture plants themselves. Rainfall cannot be controlled but the available moisture can be increased by maintaining a dense growth to prevent runoff and by building up organic matter to increase water absorption.

Other important and closely related factors are the extent and time of grazing. Food for the growth of the plant is manufactured in the green leaves by the aid of sunlight. If the green leaf surface is kept at a minimum, the lack of sufficient manufactured plant food will in time limit plant growth. Root growth depends upon the extent of the green leaf surface, therefore if we graze too closely for a prolonged period, the root growth is affected and hence we limit the normal increase of perennial grasses by root growth and also may bring about a shallow rooted condition which increases the susceptibility of the plant to injury from drought.

Grasses require more leaf surface at certain times of the year than at others to enable them to store up manufactured foods in the roots for use during less favorable periods. Overgrazing in the fall, limits the reserve of plant food in the roots and results in slow spring growth. Therefore, pastures required for early spring use should be allowed to make abundant leaf growth before winter. Pastures grazed closely in the fall should be allowed to recover in the spring before grazing starts. For best grown, bluegrass should be kept at a height of two to four inches.

HALL BEAUTIFIED

The Odd Fellows Hall has been beautified by a general overhauling in its interior. The walls and ceiling have been repapered, all the wood work repainted, as was also the stairway and many other improvements. As the Odd Fellows order had surrendered its charter to the Grand Lodge the latter organization supplied the funds for the improvement. It was intended to furnish the hall with a new carpet but $50 left out of the funds given them and that was insufficient to buy same. The interior decoration was done by Roland Glenn and assistants. There was a movement on foot some time ago for the Masonic lodge to purchase the hall, but it is still in abeyance.

SENATOR LOGAN DENIES REPORT

Statement That He Was To Receive Federal Appointment

"There have been suggestions in the newspaper recently that I was to be appointed a Federal Judge or given some other appointment that would preclude my making the race for the Senate. Such statements are without any foundation. In fact, I seek no appointment of any kind. I shall make the race for the Senate and regardless of whether I have few or many opponents I shall win the nomination. If Roosevelt is entitled to an endorsement by Kentucky Democrats, so am I, and that is all I ask. I would and should have had no opposition. I invited no fight. If those supporting either of the other candidates desire a fight, let us begin it and I shall neither give nor ask quarter.

If the party becomes disorganized and the State of Kentucky becomes doubtful for Roosevelt, I will have the satisfaction of knowing that I am not responsible for such a situation. I shall continue and complete my organization, and then I shall begin a speaking campaign in which I shall inform the people of those things which they have a right to know. Others have struck the first blow entirely unprovoked. I am not compelled to forego defending myself."—M. M. Logan.

Cooling Milk in Winter Important

Dairymen Is Advised to Use Well Insulated Tank and Clean Quarters.

By Prof. H. J. Bruckner, Dairy Dept., The Ohio State College, Columbus, Ohio—WNU Service.

A can of milk that stands overnight may appear to have been cooled properly because some of the milk freezes. Slow cooling before it freezes makes an inferior grade of milk, and, in addition, the frozen milk usually stays in the can when the milk is dumped at the milk plant or station. Hence some of the milk is lost even though it might "get by."

Neither is the setting of milk in a snow bank or on a cake of ice during winter nights a satisfactory way to cool milk. The can on a cake of ice will cool at the bottom and thus will cool the milk in the bottom of the can.

Since the cold milk at the bottom of the can is heavier than the warm milk on top, the cold milk stays at the bottom and the warm milk remains on top; hence, all the milk is never cooled.

The can in the snow bank does not cool because a few minutes after it is placed in the snow bank, the snow against the can melts and leaves a space that forms good insulation; the retards cooling and almost prevents it. Even in very cold weather, that air space between the can and the snow is not changed very much by the cold air above.

Actually, a can of milk will cool much more quickly if it is allowed to stand in the cold wind than if it is placed on ice or in a snow bank. If all dairymen are to cut down on the amount of milk rejected this winter and put out a better product, they should cool their milk in a well insulated milk tank in a clean milk house, the same as during hot weather. Losses to rejected milk cost dairymen thousands of dollars each year.

Warehouse Board Sealers

Rule on Handling Corn

Due to the high percentage of moisture contained in the corn in some sections, the Iowa department of agriculture recently made a ruling that no corn will be sealed by the warehouse board sealers which is a greater danger than fire from a staked side of a crib or a suitable ventilator. As a general rule, it is held that any crib which is more than eight feet wide and in which the corn is more than eight feet deep, should have a ventilator unless the corn happens to be extremely dry.

Strings of six-inch lath laid every two or three feet crosswise of the corn crib will furnish satisfactory ventilation in some cases. Vertical ventilators, somewhat resembling chimneys, can be constructed with two-by-fours about a foot apart each way and connected with one-by-three slats. These vertical slats are sometimes connected up with horizontal strings of lath.

In addition to equipping the crib with ventilators, salting also will be of considerable help in preventing mold in corn which contains 30 per cent moisture at cribbing time. One pound of salt for each hundred bushels of corn is the common proportion to use. Two pounds of salt for a hundred bushels is still more effective, but such a heavy application of salt is not wise when the corn is to be fed to live stock. Salting, incidentally, should always be used in connection with the ventilating device—Wallace Farmer.

Letter of Appreciation

From Rev. T. L. Wooten Pastor Baptist Church

Dear Editor:—
As I am closing my work, as pastor of the First Baptist church, here, Wednesday, July 8, and will be leaving Walton, on July 16, I want to express to you my deep appreciation for the many courtesies you have extended to me in letting me use the columns of your paper. It has been a great joy to fellowship with you. Yours is a great town paper and I think everyone here should subscribe to it and read it.
May I say to my friends in and out of the church, that I value this friendship very highly. I have a great many loyal friends and it is an inspiration to me, as I go, to know that they have stood by me.
Of course there are a few people here who do not like me, but everyone has a few that do not like them. If a man is true to his duty, some will not like him.
In leaving Walton, I am carrying with me the joys of friendship and thoughts of the best wishes of my friends, and forgetting the other things.
May your paper have many years of service and may you enjoy good health that you may continue to edit it.
With every good wish to you and through you, to all my friends I am,
Yours truly,
T. L. WOOTEN.

WALTON BANKS CONSOLIDATED MONDAY MORNING

For Almost a Year There Has Been Talk of Consolidation of Dixie State and Walton Equitable Banks

For almost a year, there has been talk of the consolidation of the Walton Equitable and Dixie State Banks. The stockholders and officers of the Walton Equitable Bank were approached by those interested in consolidation, but it seems the latter were not unanimously interested in merging their bank with the Dixie State. Then the state and national representatives came upon the scene, declaring Walton was too small for two banks to command sufficient business to justify two institutions and rather insisted on the consolidation. Proxies were sent out June 25th to stockholders of both banks to get the consensus of opinion. Some of the stockholders in the Walton Equitable Bank were opposed to the merger, but on return of the proxies, the majority were in favor of consolidation.
The banking paraphernalia of the Dixie State Bank was moved to the Walton Equitable building this week and the quarters of the new bank (Dixie State) will be vacated as a banking institution. The consolidated banks will be known as the Dixie State Bank.
Since Uncle Sam has guaranteed the deposits in all banks, up to $5,000 on each account, the government has become very stringent in banking matters and these institutions must do just as the government says or go out of business. Naturally it must safeguard its interests in all these financial institutions and justly so. However, the older citizens who had become used to the old order of things, resent the entrance of the National Government in their banking business.
The new officers of the bank are as follows: Cashier, Chas. W. Thompson; Assistant Cashiers, J. B. Doan and E. S. Orr.
Since Mr. Doan took charge of the Walton Equitable Bank a year and a half ago this institution has grown greatly in business and deposits. He made the bank a valuable officer and the stockholders appreciate the great help he was in building up business.

It was quite late when the group departed for their homes, after a very enjoyable and somewhat strenuous evening. About thirty members and friends took part in the evenings fun.

Saint Joan of Arc Was a Gentle Peasant Girl

San Joan of Arc, a gentle peasant girl who led the soldiers of France to victory at the siege of Orleans, was born in the village of Domremy, in 1412. While her brothers and sisters were sent out into the fields with their father, her mother kept Joan at home for the spinning and weaving. Thus she grew to strong and comely girlhood, known throughout the village for her gentleness, clarity and piety, notes a writer in the Philadelphia Record.

Driven by visions (revelations) from Heaven she believed them to be) to leave her home and make her way to the court of the uncrowned king of France, she prevailed upon him to accept her as the rescuer of his country. Clad in full armor, with sword and banner, Joan of Arc was mounted on a charger at the head of the French troops. Fired by her courage, they marched on Orleans, defeated the English and then marched on to Rheims.

There, with Joan at his side, Charles VII was crowned king of France in the cathedral which was burned almost 500 years later by the Germans in the World war. Joan's success was short lived, for in May, 1430, she was captured by the English, imprisoned for a year and on May 23, 1431, she was burned at the stake in the market place at Rouen. Twenty-five years later she was found innocent of the charges against her, and in 1919 she was declared a saint.

HICKS ADMITS MILLER CRIME

Shot Three Times When Opposite Warsaw, Ky., in Indiana and Taken To Madison

Breaking down under persistent questioning, Heber L. Hicks, 2626 Victory Parkway, Cincinnati, late Tuesday night admitted in a signed confession that he had instigated the "headless body" slaying of Capt. Harry R. Miller, retired Cincinnati fireman, June 11th.
Hicks completely exonerated Miss Flora Miller, 628 Crown Street, Cincinnati, eccentric sister of the slain fire captain. She was released from custody Tuesday night.

Hicks said he employed three men to commit the crime while he went to a picture show with Miss Miller to establish his alibi. He paid them he said, $400 in cash and 100 shares of Bethlehem Steel stock part of Captain Miller's holdings.
Declaring that his motive was to obtain possession of Capt. Miller's stock holdings, which he estimated at $120,000, Hicks said the stocks had been placed in a strongbox at the home of Miss Miller on Crown street without her knowledge.

The murder, he declared, took place at the New Trenton, Ind. home of Captain Miller after a terrific battle in which Captain Miller was felled with an iron bar.
Opposite Warsaw, Ky., on Indiana side Captain Miller then was shot three times.

Despite this, Hicks said, Captain Miller did not die until the automobile carrying his body had reached Madison, Ind., 75 miles from his home. The body then was taken to Kentucky and dismembered, according to Hicks.

Hicks confession was given Tuesday night at the barracks of the Indiana State Police at Seymour after he had been gripped, with Miss Miller, for 20 hours without interruption, even for sleep.

The confession came after Hicks confronted with a mass of evidence and innumerable questions, interrupted the questioning to ask if he could talk to Miss Miller alone.

This request being granted, he passed ten minutes with her. At the end of this conversation he proceeded to tell his story.

Escaped Prisoner Thought Seen Here

Monday, a Young Man Answering to the Description of Fugitive

Monday afternoon a young man answering the description of Riley Hurdum, age 26, who escaped from officer E. A. Altwater, Florida State Transfer officer, at or near Crescent Springs, while aboard a Southern Railway train. Hurdum was under life sentence for shooting a man at Miami, Fla. He was caught in Oregon after he had escaped from a prison camp in Florida. The man seen in Walton is said to have worn similar clothes to those described on the fugitive. He was making rapid strides south on the Dixie Highway and showed no inclination to "hitch-hike."

Mrs. E. B. Powers and son-in-law Dr. H. A. Alister and wife of Covington, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. I. Conrad the 4th, the latter motoring on to Harrodsburg, Ky. returning Sunday evening, when Mrs. Powers returned home with them.

The ice cream social given by the Young People's Division of the Walton Methodist church, on the lawn of the church, July 4th, was a success socially and financially.

He feelingly expressed himself on this evidence of the esteem in which he is held by a large number of his members who had stood by him and been so helpful during his ministry of the church and his only regret was his departure from these faithful friends.

The Statue of Liberty

The head of the Statue of Liberty was completed in time for exhibition at the Paris exposition in 1878, the forehead having been sent to Philadelphia for showing at the Centennial exposition in 1876. Thence it was transported to Madison Square Garden, New York city, where it remained until the statue was formally dedicated in 1886, three years after the framework and base had been put into place. It rises 305 feet from foundation of pedestal to top of torch. The length of a hand is 16 feet 5 inches. The index finger is 8 feet long. The thickness of the hand from ear to ear is 10 feet. The nose is 4 feet 6 inches long. The mouth is 3 feet across.

Three Parishes in One Church

The chapel at Tunbridge wells holds the distinction of being the only church to stand in two counties and three parishes, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly. It is partly in Kent and partly in Sussex. When the clergyman leaves the vestry he comes out of the parish of Frant, Sussex. If he is going to officiate at the altar, he walks into the parish at Tunbridge, Kent, while in the pulpit he stands in the parish of Speldhurst.

Some of the suggested antidotes for cyanide poisoning seem to be remarkably effective. Their use by experienced veterinary practitioners is to be recommended in cases of sudden and violent intoxication in which cyanophoric plants are involved. It is not, however, to be concluded that because animals recover after such treatment for cyanide poisoning that the cause of illness was in every instance the result of cyanide poisoning. In other words, the recognition of a disease on the basis of recovery after a specific treatment is not usually a safe way to decide as to the cause. Abundance of hydrocyanic acid in the feed or stomach contents must be found before one can be certain that cyanide is a cause of illness. In cases of death it must also be found in the vital organs.

Fertilizer for the Pasture

A fertilizer containing both nitrogen and phosphate should be used for the establishment of a new bluegrass pasture. If the soil is medium or above in fertility, says the Missouri Farmer, 200 pounds of 4-12-4 or 4-16-4 fertilizer, or 100 pounds of sodium nitrate plus 200 pounds of 20 per cent superphosphate should be applied. On soils below medium in fertility, 400 pounds of superphosphate should be applied if a good bluegrass pasture is desired. Lime should be added to those soils known to be very acid at the rate of one ton of agricultural limestone or 400 pounds of fine lime per acre. No attempt should be made to establish Kentucky bluegrass on the poorer soils.

Water for Horses

For city horses there is no reason why water should not be kept before them at all times. In fact, this is the practice during the summer when horses are out on pasture. The difficulty comes with working horses, who when they come in from heavy work are likely to over-drink, with the resulting danger of founder. Under most conditions, therefore, it is probably safer to water horses at fixed periods, so that the amounts may be controlled than to allow them free access to unlimited water.

L. AND N. FAMILY EMPLOYEES RALLY

To Be Held At Latonia Race Track
On Night of July 10

JAMES B. HILL

Louisville & Nashville Railroad employees of the Cincinnati Division will participate in a huge Family Rally to be held at Latonia Race Track pavilions on the night of July 10th. The program for this affair will consist principally of entertainment—numbers, the performers being selected from employees and their families. The feature of the program will be an address by the Company's President, Mr. James B. Hill, which will be the only talk of the evening.

Two special trains will be operated, one from Louisville and one from Richmond, Ky., to bring employees and their families to Latonia for this event. Food will be available on the grounds.

At similar rallies held on other divisions of the system during the past year, attendance has ranged from 17,000 to 3,000. It is expected that several thousand employees and their families will attend the meeting at Latonia.

The Rally is being sponsored by the L&N Management and grows out of interest of the Road in its relations to its employees and the public.

Delayed Pruning Halts Grape Loss

Full Extent of Damage
Must Be Known to Aid in a Larger Field.

By A. S. Cobb, Chief in Small Fruit Culture, University of Illinois-WNU Service.

Certain varieties of grape vines have been so hard hit by the severe winter that pruning this spring should be delayed until the full extent of the damage can be told and the vines pruned accordingly. Any vines on which the fruit buds have not been killed, if properly pruned, can be made to yield twice what they otherwise would.

The grower should look upon his vines as separate individuals, and after allowing for gradations in vigor resulting from insects and diseases, soil differences and weather conditions should handle the vines in such a way that vine growth and yield of well matured clusters are balanced yearly.

Results of studies with Concord grapes showed that if most of last season's shoots were too short and too weak to produce laterals, the vine was pruned too lightly the previous season. That is, too many nodes were left. If the shoots were so vigorous that they produced an excessive amount of lateral growth, too many nodes had been removed the previous winter.

The grower therefore should strike the balance between these two extremes by leaving enough nodes at pruning time so that vigorous shoots will grow for the following year's crop, while at the same time enough fruit is allowed to grow and mature for the current season. However, these shoots should not be vigorous enough to send out many side branches or laterals. From 50 to 70 nodes to the vine usually will be enough under normal conditions.

It also is important that nodes be left on either four or six canes, rather than on a large number of short spurs. It has been found that the best fruiting buds are found on those canes from the fourth to the twelfth node. Hence most of the best fruit will be removed and the vines will run to wood if they are "spur pruned."

Several well-matured canes at least as large as a lead pencil should be left with from 12 to 15 nodes on each cane. The number will depend upon the previous growth of the plant and the size and quality of the crop.

Why Some Forage Plants Cause Death of Animals

A few good forage plants are known to be cyanophoric at some time in their growth. That is, they contain compounds that decompose to liberate hydrocyanic acid (prussic acid). When these plants are associated with sudden death among animals that eat of them, it is commonly assumed that such fatalities are the result of cyanide poisoning, says a writer in Successful Farming.

Some of the suggested antidotes for cyanide poisoning seem to be remarkably effective. Their use by experienced veterinary practitioners is to be recommended in cases of sudden and violent intoxication in which cyanophoric plants are involved. It is not, however, to be concluded that because animals recover after such treatment for cyanide poisoning that the cause of illness was in every instance the result of cyanide poisoning. For city horses there is no reason why water should not be kept before them at all times. In fact, this is the practice during the summer when horses are out on pasture. The difficulty comes with working horses, who when they come in from heavy work are likely to over-drink, with the resulting danger of founder. Under most conditions, therefore, it is probably safer to water horses at fixed periods, so that the amounts may be controlled than to allow them free access to unlimited water.

Smoke Telegraph

Among slight signals, some of the earliest and most widely employed for communication by day were based on the rising of smoke. Since man, alone of all animals, uses fire, the appearance of smoke was always an accepted primitive means of evidence of the presence of another human being. If not self-explanatory, a column of smoke signified the danger of a potential enemy. If, however, the smoke was seen in some particular manner, it was a symbol of friendship and, through the use of a prearranged code, could be used for communication. It is interestingly covering a smoldering fire with a blanket and uncovering it, the North American Indian broke the steady column of smoke, which rose from it, up into a series of puffs or clouds, the sequence or combinations of which could be used, according to prearrangement, to "telegraph" from place to place, either directly or by the use of relays.

How Indians Tanned Hides

One process used by the Indians in tanning deer hides was first to scrape off all fat and flesh adhering to the pelt. Then the fat and brains of the deer would be rubbed into the flesh side and the skin rinsed out in water repeatedly. It was a long and tedious process to create a really fine piece of buckskin, states a writer in the Detroit News, but the Indians didn't mind for they had plenty of time on their hands and, anyway, the squaws did most of the work. Two kinds of buckskins were created; one was white and the other smoke-tanned. The last was repeatedly smoked during the tanning process over a small fire with plenty of smoke. After many weeks of labor the hide would be ready for fashioning in garments.

Movable Freezing Point

Water will freeze when inclosed in a vacuum; it will freeze at a point 1-100 of a degree higher than the ordinary freezing point. To freeze, water must expand. By placing a great pressure upon it and limiting its expansion, it is possible to reduce the freezing point. Experimenters have kept it from freezing, by this method, until it was several degrees below the zero of the Fahrenheit scale. Correspondingly, by reducing the normal pressure on the water expansion is freer and the freezing point is raised. The atmosphere pressure being comparatively slight, the creation of a vacuum serves to raise the freezing point only a small fraction of a degree.

AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION SERVICE

Soybeans, Cowpeas May be Grown for Hay in New Program

Soybeans and cowpeas may be grown as emergency hay crops in Kentucky, under provisions of the Agricultural Conservation Program provided they are followed with cover crops, according to an announcement from the College of Agriculture at Lexington.

This fact is said to be of particular interest at this time, since the drought has focused attention to the need of these crops to offset the scarcity of hay in the state. Thousands of farmers may still sow soybeans, cowpeas, sudan grass, millet and other hay and pasture crops.

Soybeans and cowpeas pastured grazed or hogged-off, either when green or mature, are classified as soil-conserving crops in the Agricultural Conservation Program. They also may be harvested for hay and still classified as soil conserving provided a winter cover crop is planted on the acreage prior to Oct. 31st.

Other changes contemplated in the program, as a result of the drought, include permission to plant additional acreage of sudan grass, sweet sorghum and millet without affecting soil-conserving payments.

The College of Agriculture recommends soybeans as the best emergency hay crop that still may be grown, if weather conditions are favorable. Cowpeas make equally as good hay, but the seed is more expensive and the hay harder to cure. Drilling soybeans with a grain drill at the rate of 25 to 30 pounds to the acre is recommended.

Sudan grass and millets may be grown for hay and sown even later than soybeans, but their hay is inferior. Millet may sown as late as August 1st.

Sudan makes a good emergency grass crop, and will produce an abundance of grazing until freezing weather, if the fall is favorable.

The college also suggests that farmers wherever possible sow alfalfa this fall. Alfalfa is considered the most dependable hay crop that can be grown in Kentucky.

You will be surprised at the quick results you get from the classified ad. column of the Advertiser, on anything you wish to sell or buy.

One of Deadliest Poisons
Although the toxin produced by tetanus bacilli, which causes lockjaw, is one of the deadliest poisons known to mankind, lethal amounts vary widely with different animals. As one example, the amount necessary to kill a chicken will fatally poison at least 500 horses.—William Hoffman, New York city, in Collier's Weekly.

Loss of Valuable Soil

Some crops are enemies of soil erosion and other crops are allies. Some crops protect and bind the soil and others induce soil losses.

According to the Soil Conservation Service nearly all forage crops—such as alfalfa, the clovers, sudan grass, and lespedeza—check soil washing and blowing.

The Soil Conservation Service is recommending strip cropping to thousands of farmers co-operating in its 14 demonstration areas throughout the country. Strip cropping means planting strips of close-growing, soil-protecting crops on the contour between strips of clean-cultivated, self-depleting crops. Each close-growing strip checks the speed of water running down the slope. The strips of protecting crops catch the soil that washes away from clean-cultivated strips. Combined with terracing and terrace outlet drainageways, strip cropping provides the best protection against cropland erosion in many regions.

Strip cropping also is effective in retarding wind erosion. Close-growing crops break the wind, and in addition help build up fertility and conserve moisture in the soil.

Strip cropping is comparatively new in erosion-control procedure, but is being used on nearly all demonstration projects in 41 states.

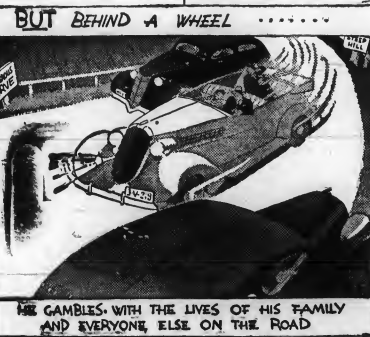

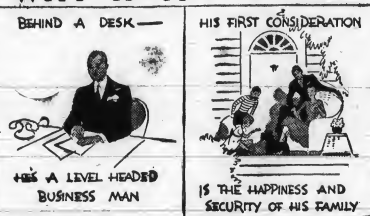

Two Tons of Roots
Alfalfa improves soil conditions very rapidly because of its huge root system which penetrates much more deeply than any other legume. Alfalfa roots remaining in the soil increase the humus content and add supplies of nitrogen and other plant foods. The roots seem to improve the physical properties of the soil. This improvement is particularly noticeable on heavy soil. The penetration of the roots into the subsoil permits the entrance of air and water. Dr. C. J. Willard of the Ohio State University found that the average weight of alfalfa roots per acre in six field tests was two tons. A good crop of alfalfa will leave 125 pounds of nitrogen, 25 pounds of phosphoric acid and 40 pounds of potash in the soil. This is about twice the amount of plant nutrients that are contained in a ton of ordinary fertilizer. It is twice as much plant food as red or Alsike clover leaves in the soil and ten times as much as is deposited in the soil by a crop of soy beans.

Poisonous Plants
Live stock losses caused by poisonous plants can be reduced if care is taken to keep live stock on pastures that will furnish an adequate supply of good grass. Avoid pasturing where poisonous weeds may be more plentiful than edible plants. Care should be taken so as not to permit live stock to have access to branches of trees of the wild cherry that may have been broken or cut down. Water hemlock and white snakeroot should be destroyed. The outstanding types of field weeds are European bindweed, perennial sow thistle, quack grass and Canada thistle. It is worth while to keep a careful lookout for new weeds. If they are of the perennial type, growing from both root and seed they should be eradicated at once.—Rural New-Yorker.

Feed Combinations
When the dairy farmer has an adequate quantity of legume hay and silage, he has the basis for a splendid ration and has many ways to make a mixture of milk feed and grains that will make a balanced ration with silage and alfalfa. Feeding a cow 15 pounds of alfalfa hay and 25 pounds silage, provides 1.9 pounds protein, almost enough to make a pound of buttermilk. It is plain then that the dairy farmer can use most any combination of feeds with this roughage.

When Is a Person Not a Good Driver?

WHY IS IT . . .

A person at his desk may be the most conservative of individuals—the kind who not only considers a matter once but twice, and is likely to sleep over it, if the matter is really important. The world is full of men and women who are most considerate of the members of their families—people who constantly think of the happiness and security of those dependent upon them. The level-headed and considerate people are regarded the salt of the earth. They aren't the type who would ever get involved in an automobile accident because of carelessness or recklessness on their part. But the level-headed person—the considerate individual—level-headed when it comes to business matters—considerate when it comes to the members of his family, the sick and

Bundle of Twigs Serves as Calendar for Indians

A quaint system of calendar-making, similar to that employed by the Bible Patriarchs, is practiced by the Surree Indians of the Indian reserve outside Calgary, Alberta. It is the medicine man's responsibility, notes a writer in The Bliss Magazine, to transfer each morning a twig from a bundle representing the unused part of the month to another bundle that represents the used part. Altogether, he has five bundles, each containing thirty twigs. The third bundle, signifying June in summer and December in winter, is always kept in two equal parts. The divisions denote mid-summer's day in one instance and mid-winter's day in the other. In winter the twigs are kept with their points downwards; in summer the position is reversed. Having only five bundles to tally off six months each half-year, the medicine man always uses the fifth bundle twice. The picturesque names and emblems by which the Indians recognized the months run as follows:

April, Frog Moon, Bull Frog's Croak; May, Sprouting of Green Leaves and Grass; June, Egg (Duck's) Moon; July, Moulting (Duck's) Moon; August, Flying (Duck's) Moon; September, Running of the Deer; October, Fall of Leaves Moon; November, Misty Moon; December, Clear, Frosty Moon; January, Great Moon; February, Eagle Moon, eagles soar; March, Goose Moon, geese come.

Creation of Petroleum

Antedates Animal Life

Oil is of inorganic origin, having been made by the interaction of certain elements inside the earth's crust while that body was agitating in its present condition. Another theory is that it is of organic origin. This latter is the most generally accepted and it has the bulk of evidence to support it. Even though most of it is circumstantial. According to this theory oil was formed through an unusual and gradual breaking up of vast amounts of organic matter. Some of this organic matter was plant life but most of it was animal life and microscopic animal life at that.

Knowing the countless billions of gallons of petroleum that have been taken from the earth and knowing of the billions of gallons that still remain in the mighty subterranean reservoirs this might seem a bit incredible. But that is because we are unable to realize the extent of a million years or the number of animals that can live and die during that time.

The process which eventually led to the creation of petroleum started hundreds of millions of years before the first blade of grass grew or before the first bit of animal life moved about on dry land.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Species of Swans

Ornithologists seem to agree that there are but two species of swans native to the states; and both are pure white. One is the whistling swan, the most common and often found in Great Lakes waters. The other is the trumpeter swan, a bird of the West which is almost extinct. The trumpeter swan, another great white bird, was formerly abundant north of the Arctic circle and in Greenland but this bird is considered extinct. The Australian black swan is much smaller than these three and is frequently confused with our common black swan. The black swan is found only in zoos and bird sanctuaries in this country, according to a writer in the Detroit News, and many persons when they observe them think they are black swan.

"Entangling Alliances"

Washington, in his farewell address, published September 17, 1796, said: "Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice? It was Jefferson who said, 'Peace, commerce and honest friendship with all nations—entangling alliances with none.' This was in his first inaugural address, March 4, 1801.

Changing Weight of Body

There frequently is a little confusion between the terms mass and weight. The mass of a body is a measure of the amount of matter in it, while the weight is the gravitational force acting on that mass. For most purposes on the earth's surface the two terms are interchangeable without serious error. The mass is unchangeable, but weight depends upon the distance of the body from the earth's center. The farther we move out into space the less we would weigh, because we would be farther from the center of the earth. However, for such attitudes as we are actually able to reach this loss is almost imperceptible.

Animals That Nature Forgot

Back in the age of reptiles several crude mammals began to appear and some of them probably were the ancestors of the solenodons. These ancient solenodons started out to be something, but became the animals that nature forgot. They started to grow a nose that would be of some use, but left off when the job was half finished. The result is that Solenodon paradoxus has a nose that's always in the way. He looks as though he might be an insect-eating animal, but his strong jaws and teeth indicate he subsists on more durable fare. In order to pick it up and eat it, however, he has to do something with his nose. He turns it up, down or to one side.

Suggests Sudan and Soybeans as Emergency Crops
Sudan grass is named by Prof. E. J. Kinney of the Kentucky College of Agriculture as probably the best emergency crop to sow for late summer and fall pasture. Sown now, with favorable weather conditions, it should furnish a large amount of grass until killed by frost. Drilling is preferred to broadcasting, using 25 to 30 pounds of seed to the acre.

As the supply of hay in Kentucky is certain to be scanty, Prof. Kinney suggests liberal seedings of rye or other small grains, in order to lessen the amount of hay needed.

For an emergency hay crop, he recommends soybeans, the seed of which is said to be plentiful. Best varieties for late seeding are Virginia, Wilson and other medium late kinds. Cowpeas give better yields than soybeans from late seedings, but the seed costs more and the hay is more difficult to cure.

Sudan grass and millets permit even later seeding than soybeans or cowpeas, but the hay is less valuable. Millet will make a crop when sown as late as August 1st, in moisture conditions are favorable. If most of the lespedeza is killed by the drought, seed will be scarce at the carry-over was small. Therefore, Prof. Kinney recommends that surviving stands be kept for seed.

He also suggests that alfalfa be sown this fall wherever possible. Alfalfa is unquestionable the most dependable hay crop that can be grown in Kentucky. He also would sow more grass with small grains.

Boone County
Farm Notes

H. R. FORKNER, County Agent
New Drought Ruling Under ACP
The Agricultural Conservation Program because of the drought has issued new rulings, to permit farmers to seed any acreage to soybeans and cow peas for hay this year provided such acreage is followed by a winter cover crop such as rye, wheat, etc. Formerly soybeans and cow peas were classified as soil depleting crops and counted against the soil depleting base.

The above ruling will be a big help to Boone County farmers. The present drought has cut the grass hay crop to practically nothing. Very little clover hay was produced and the alfalfa crop will be short unless rains come immediately. Boone County farmers are facing a drought that promises to exceed that of either 1936 or 1934. Soybean and cow pea hay while expensive will be a big help to many Boone county farmers this year.

There is a possibility that ACP rulings will also allow farmers to plant additional acres of sudan grass, millet and sweet sorghum without affecting their payment. These crops make rapid growth and if favorable weather conditions should develop may help solve the present hay and feed shortage.

4-H Fair August 22nd
The Boone County 4-H and Utopia Club Fair and County Picnic date has temporarily been set for Saturday, August 22nd. Plans are for the best fair since the starting of the event four years ago.

Arrangements for the fair were made by the 4-H and Utopia Council in a meeting held at Burlington. The Council elected the following officers for 1938: D. H. Norris, Chairman; John E. Crigler, Secy.; John Conner, Treas.; R. V. Lentz, Adv. Manager; Mrs. Verena Pope and Mrs. B. C. Stephens on other committees.

Enjoyable Event
Boone County Utopia Club members held the most enjoyable meeting of the year at the home of Wilton, Alvin and Zelma Stephens of near Burlington. Forty members and visitors attended.

The meeting was held around a bonfire in the Stephens woods. A Weiner and marshmallow roast was held following the regular business meeting. The next meeting of the club will be an all day project tour on Thursday, July 30th.

ACP Drought Rulings Important
The recent ACP drought rulings are important to farmers. Apparently many farmers have misunderstood the interpretation of these rulings. A brief summary is as follows:

1. Farmers may now sow all the soybeans and cowpeas for hay or pasture they wish, provided a winter cover crop (as rye, wheat, etc.) follows the soybeans or cowpeas this fall. The soybeans or cowpeas do not count against the soil depleting base and do not affect benefit payments.

2. Spring oats and wheat when mature if harvested or grazed off whether followed with a legume or not count as a soil depleting crop and also count against the soil depleting base the same as an acre of corn.

Hay Shortage—Soybeans
Emergency Crop
Boone county farmers are faced with a prospective hay shortage for this winter, and a hay shortage is a serious problem for producers of cattle, sheep and horses.

Soybeans, cowpeas, sudan grass and millet may be sown within the next two weeks and should give a good hay crop if conditions this fall are at all favorable.

Prof. E. J. Kinney of the College, recommends 25 to 30 pounds of sudan grass drilled per acre for pasture. Best varieties of soybeans for late seeding are Wilson Black, Virginia or other medium late varieties. Millet will make a crop if sown at late as August, if moisture conditions are favorable.

Korean lespedeza where not killed by drought may make a good crop if there is moisture the rest of the season. Prof. Kinney expects a Korean seed shortage in 1937 due to the drought and suggests that farmers save seed where possible.

Boone county was blessed with a good rain last Tuesday afternoon. The south section of the county below Rabbit Hash and through Walton had a second rain on Wednesday. Considerable more rain is still needed in the north section of the county.

Big-Team Outfit Cuts Power Cost

Reduce Expenses by Using Less Grain, More Pasture and Roughage.

By E. T. ROBINSON, Live Stock Specialist, University of Illinois
WNU Service

By combining from five to twelve horses under the management of one driver, farmers operating big team outfits obtain low cost power ranging from 6.4 cents to 11.8 cents for each work horse hour.

On ordinary horse farms, a work horse hour cost 18 per cent more and on tractor farms 23 per cent more than on big-team farms, based on a survey of horse farms and tractor farms in the corn belt.

The big-team operators worked the largest horses and mules and averaged the greatest number of days of work a head in a year, yet they cheapened their horse cost by using less grain and more pasture, legume hay, straw and cornstalks. They turned their work cost over on pasture at night and on idle days in summer, and in winter used legume hay to balance stalk fields and straw stacks to make satisfactory maintenance for horses.

In farms studied in the survey, average amounts fed to a work horse a year were about 3,200 pounds of grain, mostly corn and oats, and 5,000 pounds of dry roughage, including considerable straw and corn stover. In addition the horses grazed about six months on grass and stalk fields.

Plants Cannot Go in Quest of Food

Use Fertilizers Where the Roots Can Reach Them or Value Is Wasted.

By DR. GEORGE M. MCCLURE, Agronomist, Ohio State University, WNU Service

The time when fertilizers are applied and the position they are placed in relation to the roots of the plants may have considerable effect upon the value obtained from the use of fertilizer.

Plants can use the fertilizers only when they become dissolved in the film of water that coats the tiny soil particles which are in contact with the roots. It is a common opinion that all fertilizers dissolve rapidly and are dispersed throughout the feeding zone of the plant roots, but this is not true in many cases.

There is a decided difference in the way two common types of nitrogen carriers react after they are applied to the soil. Nitrate of soda goes into solution quite rapidly if it is applied in the fall in orchards or on fall grains, it may be carried below the zone where the roots feed before growth begins in the spring. Sulphate of ammonia reacts with the soil constituents and does not go into solution rapidly so it can be applied in the fall without loss.

Potash salts also react with the soil and are not readily lost by leaching. The fact that they are slowly soluble indicates that potash fertilizers must be distributed rather thoroughly through the soil by the method of application if the crop is to get the maximum benefit from them. Phosphorus also should be worked into the soil to make it available for use of the plants.

When phosphate fertilizers are used on grass crops, the application should be broadcast and then worked deeply into the soil with a disk. When used with row crops, such as corn, the phosphate should be applied in the rows or hills a few inches from the seed. The phosphates used for fertilizers react with the soil and this type of fertilizer may not move more than an inch from its point of application in several years.

Lighter Work Horses

Likely in Near Future

Lighter draft horses are in the picture for the future, believes J. O. Williams, in charge of horse inspection in the United States Department of Agriculture. In the cities, motor trucks in most cases have taken the place of the heavy

On the farm mechanical power has relieved the horse of the heaviest operations—such as plowing and harvesting—thus usually have taken the place of the heavy draft horse. The general farm work that remains, the lighter draft horse handles more easily and quickly, meanwhile keeping in good condition on less feed. A greater increase in prices for light draft horses in comparison with other types at live big markets, reflects the new demand for the light types.

The fact that mules from lighter draft mares usually are a little more active and better suited for both farm work and most markets, is another factor in the trend toward lighter work horses.

Air Fertilization

Smithsonian institution scientists have discovered how to make wheat greatly increase its yield without adding anything to the soil, notes Pathfinder Magazine. They fertilize the air instead. Since plants use atmospheric carbon dioxide and water in the presence of light to manufacture their substance, Dr. Earl S. Johnston, of the division of radiation and organic chemistry, increased experimentally the amount of this heavy gas in the atmosphere around a miniature wheat field until the carbon dioxide content was four times that of ordinary air. As a result the wheat showed marked increases in growth.

Sunflower Put to Work

Life isn't the same for the old Kansas sunflower these days. They've tamed it and put it to work. Planted in gardens along with beans, the sunflower makes an excellent "pole" for the bean viner to climb up on. The sunflowers grow tall enough, so that picking bean pods isn't any trick at all and the sunflower seeds are fairly good chicken feed, too.

Farm Gleanings

Farm records are a good guide to farm profits. . . . Three million sheep died during the drought in Queensland. . . . Corn is grown on 91 per cent of the farms of North Carolina. . . .

Recent improvements in canning and freezing cherries have resulted in a greater planting of cherries in the United States. . . . Wild life often suffers because of the flying mower blades. Nests are destroyed and many birds and animals are maimed. . . .

Lands in Wisconsin owned or controlled by the state, counties or the federal government amount to 3,900,000 acres, or just about 11 per cent of the entire land area of the state.

Miss Jessie Sweetnam of Covington, was the guest of Miss Graham Roberts, from Saturday until Monday.

NEW COUNTY SCHOOL PROJECT ASSURED

County Will Be Holding Company For One Building

The construction of county school buildings at Crescent Springs and Independence appeared certain Friday as the Kenton County Fiscal Court agreed to act as a holding company for the latter project.

Robert E. Sharon, superintendent of Kenton County schools, said the board of education decided Monday to build the Independence school without federal funds. It was necessary for the county to act as a holding company if the Board of Education was to receive federal funds.

A resolution to act as a holding company for both projects was tabled for the second time at the Fiscal Court meeting Friday. Judge John B. Read and Commissioner Hugh Smith favored the resolution, while Commissioners George Collopy and Carl Grosschultz voted against it.

Commissioner Smith then presented a resolution to act as a holding company for the Crescent Springs building, and it passed, with Commissioner Collopy dissenting. Delegations from Park Hills and Versailles urged the board to act as a holding company for both buildings.

Verona Station Is Discontinued

On L. and N. Railroad and Three Men Trick At Walton Now

Tuesday the closing of Verona station of the L. & N. Railroad, a station that was established when the L. & N. was first built in the early seventies took place.

Many stations have been discontinued in recent years by the encroachment on the railroad traffic by trucks and automobiles, and the concrete highways. Trucks haul the greater portion of cattle, sheep, hogs, etc. to the city markets and the automobiles have taken away almost the entire short distance passenger patronage.

In recent years the following stations have been discontinued: Bank Lick, Verona, Zion Station, Ellison, Eagle Station, Ellipse, Pendleton, Buckner, Glenarm, Pewee Valley and O'Banion.

The importance of Walton as a station is the car-load lots of coal, lumber, etc. handled.

No definite provision has been made for the office force of Verona as yet. The force is composed of William B. McCormac, W. E. Jenkins and Jas. T. Stone. E. W. Kendall is still retained as agent at Walton.

IN CRITICAL CONDITION

J. P. Collins of Elliston, is in a critical condition and his recovery is doubtful according to information received Monday. He is 74 years old, a widower and well known farmer of that section. His wife died in Feb. 1934. He is the father of William T. Collins, former station agent at Walton, who is now stationed at Sparta, Ky.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Reffet of near Napoleon, Gallatin county, were here on business Tuesday. Mr. Reffet is manager of Mrs. D. B. Wallace's farm.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Loomis of St. Petersburg, Fla., who had been here visiting his daughter Mrs. John L. Vest and family of North Main st., left recently for Asheville, N. C., where they will remain until Sept. 27.

Mrs. John C. Bedinger and sisters Mrs. Wm. Britt of Dwight, Ill., and Mrs. Anna Hinds of Chicago, Ill., spent Sunday with their sister Mrs. Chas. C. Sleet and family in the Hughes Chapel neighborhood.

J. A. Harris and daughter Miss Lillian of Verona Route 1, were welcome visitors to Walton, Thursday of last week.

Weary Summer Appetites Whetted By Plate Meals; Save Steps, Too

By JOSEPHINE GIBSON
Director, Home Food Institute

PLATE meals interest every woman who wishes to reduce the labor of summer meal preparation. All the food for the main course is placed on the luncheon or dinner plate before taking it to the table, thus saving many steps and reducing the number of dishes used. Plate meals, attractively arranged, have a greater appeal to weary summer appetites than large serving dishes of food. The luncheon menu suggested below is most attractive and practical for a summer guest luncheon. All the preparation except assembling, may be done in advance of the guests' arrival.

Luncheon Plate* Hot Biscuit or Buttered Rolls
Date Fluff with Whipped Cream*

(*) Indicates that recipes are given below.

Luncheon Plate: On each luncheon plate arrange five crisp lettuce leaves of uniform size. Place leaves so that stem ends meet in the center to resemble petals. In one lettuce leaf arrange a serving of meat or fish salad. In another a chilled deviled egg, in the third a mound of Preserved Sweet Midget Gherkins, in the next chilled quarters of tomato and slices of cucumber topped with a spoonful Roquefort cheese dressing, and in the final one a mound of Spanish Queen or Ripe Mission Olives.

Tuna Fish Salad: Place 1 7-oz. can white tuna fish in a sieve and pour hot water over it to remove oil. Chill and flake, being careful to leave in good sized pieces. Add 1 cup diced celery, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon sugar, pepper to taste, and Mayonnaise Salad Dressing to moisten. Chill before serving.

Boone County Farm Notes

H. R. FORKNER, County Agent
Specialist Presents Farm Analysis
R. E. Porter, Field Agent in Farm Account work from the College of Agriculture, presented farm account analysis to Boone county farmers on August 6th and 8th.

Individual farm analysis were presented to farmers who kept complete farm account records the past year in cooperation with the College of Agriculture. These analysis were not based on personal opinion but on the actual relations of the various farm practices to the farmer, who made an average net income, the farmer who made below average net income and the farmer who made above an average net income.

Individual farm analysis made by complete comparison of the important production factors on similar type farms are available to all farmers who keep complete farm account records in the farm account extension project.

AAA Corn-Hog Checks Received
62 first 1935 adjustment Corn-Hog checks for $5,963.55 were received last week according to John E. Crigler, secretary of the Corn-Hog Association.

The checks were distributed to the growers in the various communities Friday, Aug. 9th. These checks represent payment on 125 of the group one contracts only. Group two and group three contracts are those in which some change in the corn or hog base was made from 1934. Payments on these contracts should be made in a few weeks.

Boone county is one of the first in Kentucky to receive first adjustment 1935 corn-hog checks.

Lime Crushing Starts at Hebron
The actual crushing of agricultural limestone was scheduled to start at Hebron last week.

Farmers to date have not been able to receive relief labor and those who are supplying the labor at the present are supplying their own labor. Relief labor, however, will be available in the near future and all farmers who use relief labor will be taken care of at the earliest possible date.

August is one of the best months for sowing alfalfa and fall the best time for seeding grasses. Farmers having some crushed are expecting to use large amounts for the growing of better legumes and grass crops.

98% Growers Favor AAA Tobacco Program

Boone County tobacco growers with the largest county referendum vote to date favor the continuation of an AAA tobacco program by a record vote of 788 to 94.

882 out of a possible 1100 Boone county AAA Burley tobacco growers voted in the National referendum which closed Saturday. 83.34% of these growers favor the continuation of the AAA Burley tobacco program in some form. The present contract expires with this year's crop. If the majority of all growers favor the continuation of the AAA tobacco program a new contract on a four year basis will likely be offered.

4-H Fair List Goes to Press
Plans are being completed rapidly for the big 4-H and Utopia club Free Fair to be held at Harvest Home Fair Grounds, Saturday, Aug. 24th. The premium list went to press Wednesday of last week.

Prof. R. V. Lents, advertising manager, reported all advertising sold. After a thorough canvass of the county, he reports prospects are for the biggest and best fair and county picnic held to date. The 4-H Fair will in no way interfere with the Annual Harvest Home Fair to be held at a later date.

Walton and Grant 4-H Clubs Hold Tours
The Waltonians 4-H club held their annual club tour Wednesday, August 7th, and the Grant "True Blue" 4-H club, Thursday, Aug. 8th.

Jersey Breeders
A meeting of leading Boone county Jersey breeders was held at the Burlington Courthouse, Monday, the 5th of Aug., to make plans for the future development of the Jersey breed, for which the county is already noted.

Breeders were in high spirits as to the future. Plans were made for a second meeting at Burlington, Saturday, August 17th. Plans will be completed at this time for an annual show and sale. All breeders in the county are urged to attend.

69 Attend District 4-H Club Camp
Sixty-nine 4-H club members and leaders attended the district 4-H club camp held at Burlington High School last week. The camp program began Monday and continued until Friday morning.

The members enjoyed a splendid camp program under the supervision of E. E. Fish, camp manager. He was assisted by Wm. Ewalt of the state Y. M. C. A., Mrs. Cardosi of the National Red Cross, Roy Binford of the 4-H club department and the agents and leaders of the various counties.

The camp program included all four phases of 4-H work.

The "Head H" is represented with special classes in agriculture, home economics and nature study from 9:00 a. m. to 10:30 a. m. each day.

The "Hand H" with handicraft work in rope making, surveying and land measurements and home handicraft classes from 1:30 to 3:00 each afternoon.

The "Health H" with classes in athletics, health study and health conduct in camp.

The "Heart H" is represented in loyalty to the tribe to which each member belongs, sportsmanship, respect to others in camp and the combined influence of moral and spiritual upbuilding of the individual.

Joseph Rouse, member of the Florence X-L-L-ALL 4-H club, was awarded the state 4-H Silver Camp Medal for being one of the most outstanding members in camp work.

4-H members are looking forward to a permanent camp site for next year. Those who attended the camp from the various counties are as follows:

Campbell County—S. A. Porter, County Agent, Mrs. S. A. Porter, Home Agent, Shirley Crites, Helen Little, Frances Little, Violet Kyle, Jane Ragan, Mary Ragan, June McCarthy, Wilma Heinlein, Myrtle Schweitzer, Velma Luck, Ethel Hofstetter, Rachal Brown, Mary Ann Huppert, Thelma Scott, Everett Hofstetter, William Doan, Billy Hobbs, Robert Brown, Mary C. Interesting Utopia Tour People often ask what Utopia club members do. Those Utopians who attend the regular monthly meetings often wonder what others who are enrolled in Utopia club work do in reference to project work.

Those who attended the annual 4-H tour held last Thursday found the answers to these questions in an interesting tour. Many of the most complete farm account records in the county were found kept by Utopians.

Appetizing fruits and vegetables, beautiful lawns and flowers developed through cost accounts records, small fruit developments that are paying and have paid good cash returns, good purebred dairy herds being developed and other important features of the Utopia club were seen.

These were Utopia members and represented the work being conducted at home by Utopians during the year.

Inspection of the work leads one to believe not only in this particular line of endeavor but in all educational work. Huge profits in future economic and social returns are sure to be paid.

Style Show at Annual 4-H Fair
The sewing club girls' style show will be an important feature at the third annual 4-H and Utopia Club Fair and Harvest Home Fair grounds on Saturday, August 24th.

Prof. R. V. Lents, Advertising Manager of the fair reports that the Luhn & Sievie Company and the John R. Coppinger Company, Covington, are cooperatively sponsoring the event. Each of the four units of the sewing projects will compete separately for special prizes awarded by the above companies.

Ninety-three Boone county Sewing Club girls will be eligible to compete in these events with each girl to wear the costume made in her 4-H project.

The best and best 4-H and Utopia fair to date will be held this year according to reports of committees at the 4-H and Utopia Club Council meeting last Friday night. Plans are for a big county picnic in connection with the fair.

Time Makes Big Crop
Chester Aylor of near Burlington, reports that this year he cut 28 bushels of clover and timothy mixed hay from a nine acre field in 1929. 29 loads were cut from this same field the first year after liming in 1929.

Aylor would not report the same field would not hold crops so profitably grow any other crop before it was limed and manured. The ground limestone was crushed by the State applied in 1928 and manure was clover, sweet clover, soy beans and good hay have been grown each year since.

The above experience is not an exception to the rule. Those Boone county farmers who have followed recommendations on the growing of legumes and grasses following lime and phosphating and where possible manuring have secured wonderful results in soils and crops improvement.

June Wiley—What do they mean by "anti-trust bills," dearest?

Dearest—They must mean the bills that the grocer makes us pay in cash because we have no credit—Pathfinder.

Daughter—Maw, if you would stop bossing pa around so much.

Maw—What's the matter now?

Daughter—Well, every time I get some boy interested in me he grows serious and asks me if I take after you—Pathfinder.
